WEBSTER'S

SECONDARY-SCHOOL DICTIONARY

This new dictionary has been prepared especially for students in Academies, Seminaries, College Preparatory Schools, Public High Schools, Commercial Schools and Colleges, and, in short, in any grades in which etymologies are taught.

It is not only a handy reference manual, but it gives such information as the schools require and cannot readily obtain elsewhere except in Webster's New International Dictionary.

Its large Vocabulary contains

All the words used in ordinary speech or in school literature (including the names of characters in fiction, folklore, and mythology) with their proper capitalization, spelling, pronunciation, derivation, and irregularities of inflection, and with adequate, intelligible and accurate definitions, such as have always characterized the great Webster series.

In separate tables are

A pronouncing geographical and biographical dictionary,
A pronouncing dictionary of foreign words and phrases,
A large list of abbreviations in use in writing and printing.

PREFACE

WEBSTER'S Secondary-School Dictionary is designed for the use of pupils in the Secondary Schools and in the higher grades of the Elementary Schools, but will be found of equal value as a desk companion for everyday use.

The corresponding dictionary of the older series was Webster's Academic Dictionary. The Secondary-School Dictionary, however, while intended for the same grades of school work, is in no sense a revision of the Academic, but is a direct abridgment from Webster's New International Dictionary, the latest of the great dictionaries of the Webster series, prepared under the supervision of Dr. W. T. Harris as editor in chief.

The smaller book rests upon the high authority of its source; but in adapting the material to the needs of pupils new problems of selection and presentation were encountered that made necessary a very careful study of textbooks and curricula and extended consultation with many teachers of conspicuous ability in public and private schools, so as to determine just what words are most likely to be sought by the pupils in their school work, what the scope of the etymologies should be, the extent to which the definitions of the New International should be simplified and abridged, and the kind of grammatical information that should be included.

The Editors

The making of this new dictionary has been in the hands of editors of long experience in active lexicography, selected, because of their peculiar fitness for this special task, from the large corps that prepared Webster's New International Dictionary. As a result, the book has received such searching criticism that one will look in vain for the looseness of statement, the perfunctoriness of definition, or the inelegance of diction that heretofore has seemed inevitable in a small, highly condensed dictionary.

Vocabulary

The necessity of covering the varied literature now read by the pupils of the secondary schools has produced a vocabulary of extraordinary fullness. It includes the ordinary words now in use in standard English, such scientific words as are in general use, even those of recent origin (as radiograph, ion, radio-active, monoplane, air hole, etc.), as well as the vocabulary of the more important English classics. It is thus possible with the help of this dictionary to read understandingly not only the literature of to-day, even when of a more or less scientific character, but also works, such as those of Scott or Hardy, that contain many local or dialect words, or, again, the great poems of Milton and the great plays of Shakespeare, where are preserved many words and meanings now no longer in use.

Spelling and Pronunciation

The preferred forms of spelling and pronunciation of Webster's New International Dictionary are followed in this abridgment. Alternatives are included where these are supported by sufficient usage, especially where British usage prefers a different form, or where a simpler form is coming into use. In indicating pronunciation, the same simple system of key notation is used as in the New International, with one symbol only for each sound. It is the system that most nearly corresponds with the English sounds of the letters, and is the one used in practically all the schoolbooks in the country and in most reference books. The Guide to Pronunciation has been condensed directly from that in the New International and simplified so as to adapt it to the needs of pupil and teacher.

Capitalization

Proper names or words derived from them, titles, and the like, that should be written or printed with an initial capital have this fact indicated either by beginning the vocabulary entry itself with a capital or by inserting [cap.] at the specific definition affected.

Etymologies

In the etymologies is given such essential information as throws light upon a word's meaning and the important changes in its form. Perhaps too little use is made of this important department by most users of the dictionary. The consulter may not be interested in the forms a word has taken, and yet if he knows that "committee" is derived from cum and mitto he will be less likely to omit an m or a t, and a knowledge of the origin of correspond may lead to spelling it with the correct number of r's. However, to the pupil, the etymology of a word will be most helpful in showing its fundamental meaning, that on which all others are based. He who knows the source of splendid and awful will not be so apt to speak of a "splendid" time, nor of an "awfully nice" girl.

Inflected Forms

Inflected forms, as the plurals of nouns and pronouns, masculine and feminine forms, principal parts of verbs, comparatives and superlatives of adjectives, are indicated whenever they are irregular or when, from analogy, an irregular form might be expected. Thus, the plurals of words ending in o, the principal parts of verbs ending in silent e, etc., are included.

Definitions

The definitions are taken directly from the New International except where a change of wording would make the meaning more easily understood, or where closely related meanings could be covered in one statement. The intention has been to preserve the Webster tradition by giving an exact statement of each word's meaning, following this usually with one or more synonyms, but scrupulously avoiding the use of synonyms alone.

It is a common fault of abridged dictionaries that the definitions of terms inherently difficult have been made apparently "easy" at the expense of accuracy. Extraordinary pains have been taken in this book to achieve simplicity, but accuracy has in every instance been preferred to slipshod facility; and it will be found that when a definition is difficult, it is so only because the idea to be expressed is in itself so abstract or involved that no definition that is "easy" can be accurate.

The order of the definitions under individual words is in general the historical order, an arrangement that links together in a logical sequence all of a word's meanings, from the earliest etymological sense down to the one that is only just coming into good usage. It is thus often the readiest and surest means of differentiating the senses of related or synonymous words.

Examples

In a book of this size the giving of full quotations from authors is impossible, but wherever a mere definition is inadequate, or open to misinterpretation, or where some peculiarity of idiom is involved, examples have been added. Where a word is often or invariably used in particular phrases, as a verb with certain prepositions, these facts are indicated.

Proper Names

English literature is so saturated with the conceptions and associations belonging to proper names that it cannot be read appreciatively by one unacquainted with mythological and literary lore. Nevertheless, this is the first abridged dictionary to accord to such terms as a class a place in its vocabulary, or to afford in its definitions more than the merest scraps of information, such as in most cases would already be known to the consulter. Furthermore, there has heretofore been an entire neglect of the great Biblical characters, with which, unfortunately, we can no longer assume a familiarity to exist. These names and others of similar importance in literature are given a place in the main vocabulary of this dictionary, and each has received a characterization sufficient to convey the ideas or associations with which the name is most closely connected.

The synonyms deserve especial mention, for in no other dictionary of equal scope has so much space, or such careful attention, been given to this important subject. The number of articles devoted to the careful discrimination of synonymous words is 1170. In addition to these, some 1260 lists of synonyms are included. The nice phrasing of Professor Lowes and Professor Kittredge in Webster's New International Dictionary has been retained except where a less extended or more simple treatment seemed to demand slight modifications.

Synonyms

Illustrations are inserted wherever they add clearness to the definition or replace a long description. They are more than 1000 in number, but a single picture often explains a large number of words, so that in all more than 1700 words are actually illustrated. Such illustrations as those at castle and armor must aid in understanding a story like "Ivanhoe;" those at Zeus and Mercury show the ancients' conception of their deities; while those at harness and loom explain important processes and instruments of everyday life.

Pictures

As a rule, derivatives are fully defined. Certain classes of derivatives, as adverbs ending in -ly, nouns ending in -ness or -er, are entered after the primary word with no definition, if their meaning may be easily understood from the meaning of the primitive combined with that of the suffix. Where necessary, a direct cross reference to the suffix is entered, as, "preservable. See -ABLE," "stickiness. See -NESS." A little effort to learn thoroughly the meaning and use of any suffix referred to in this way will make immediately intelligible other words having the suffix, if the sense of the primary word is understood.

Derivatives

The important prefixes and suffixes are defined, each in its vocabulary place, and the definitions are supplemented by numerous examples. Many prefixes may be regarded as adjectives or adverbs that usage consolidates with the word modified. Their compounds are so many and so freely formed that no abridged dictionary can include them all. It is sufficient to record the important compounds and leave the consulter to gather the meaning of others from a study of the prefix. The use of suffixes is indicated above under derivatives.

Prefixes and Suffixes

The wide interpretative purpose of this dictionary has made it necessary to include many words that are no longer, or never were, in good use. The slang of Shakespeare's clowns, the colloquialisms of Dickens's rascals, the archaisms or Scotticisms of Stevenson, all demand explanation if the pupil is to understand what he reads. Yet the consulter must be safeguarded from writing or talking a hodgepodge made up from the language of widely separated centuries and civilizations. For this reason there has been added with painstaking care to every word that is not standard English the warning that it is Slang, Obsolete, Colloquial, or the like, and hence not to be used in formal discourse of to-day.

Standard English

In the Geographical and Biographical Dictionary are included such names of places and persons as are likely to be sought by users of this dictionary. In addition to the spelling and pronunciation is given such biographical and geographical information as will be of greatest interest to the consulter. Thus, a man's nationality, the date of his birth and that of his death, with some hint as to his achievements, are given for a biographical entry, while for a geographical entry are recorded location, size, population, or the like, together with any striking event or characteristic.

The Supplemental Tables

The collection of Foreign Words and Phrases is not the ready-made table so often found in small dictionaries, but one selected for its special fitness to the purpose of the book. Care was taken to include, with accurate translations, the many phrases current in literature, the mottoes of nations, states, or great organizations, proverbial expressions, and the like. A very helpful feature is the indication of the pronunciation.

REFERENCES. Numbers following the respelling for pronunciation of some words in the vocabulary refer to sections in this GUIDE.

ACCENTS AND HYPHENS. The principal accent is indicated by a heavy mark (′), and the secondary accent by a lighter mark (′), at the end of the syllable. Syllabic division is indicated by a light hyphen, except where this is replaced by an accent mark, or by a heavier hyphen used to join the members of words written or printed with a hyphen.

For a SYSTEM OF MARKING WORDS WITHOUT RESPELLING, see page xvi.

FOREIGN SOUNDS for which no special symbols are provided are represented by the nearest English equivalents.

ELEMENTS OF SPOKEN ENGLISH

☞ In this discussion, unless otherwise indicated, it is the sound of a letter that is meant in any instance, and not its name. Thus, t is called "tē"; its sound may be heard by pronouncing a word like to, and then omitting the vowel.

A

§ 1. ā as in āle, fāte, māk'er, etc., commonly called "long a," although it corresponds, at least in its main element, nearly with ĕ (§ 23), is the name sound of the letter a in modern English. It is usually diphthongal, beginning with a sound nearly that of ĕ in mĕt, and ending with a brief sound as of ĭ in ĭt, which is most noticeable at the end of a syllable, or before a voiced (sonant) consonant, as in māy, āle. In passing from the ĕ position to the ĭ position the tongue is raised, and the main element of the ā becomes somewhat closer than ĕ. The ā is never simply ĕ prolonged.

The sound (ā) is also otherwise variously represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in paĭn, day, break, veil, obey, and (exceptionally) gaol, gauge, aye (ever).

§ 2. â as in sen'âte, pref'âce, vil'lâge, etc., is a modification of ā (āle), in unaccented syllables. In ordinary speech, the sound is nearly ĕ as in ĕnd, or, as pronounced by some, ĭ in ĭt. In formal speech, the sound approaches ā in many adjectives and nouns where in the corresponding verb it has the full sound, as in con'ju-gâte, a., ag'gre-gâte, n. It is nearly ā when before another vowel in a following syllable, as in chā-ot'ic, Ju'dā-ism. In such words as mis'cel-lā-ny, sal'u-tā-ry, etc., the â usually is more nearly ā in American than in British use.

§ 3. å as in cåre, com-påre', pår'ent, etc., occurs in standard English only in syllables closed by r and more or less strongly accented. The sound varies somewhat with different speakers. By many, it is made with the tongue nearly in the position for ă in ăt (§ 4); by others, with the tongue nearly in the position for ĕ in ĕnd (§ 23). But in either case the tongue is tenser and slightly higher than for the ă or for the ĕ, so that the å is not simply ă prolonged, as some describe it, or ĕ prolonged, as others describe it.

An a before r does not usually take the sound of å when the r immediately precedes a sounded vowel or another r in a following syllable of the word; as in vā'ry, wā'ry, Mā'ry, etc.; păr'i-ty, păr'ry, chăr'i-ty, etc. (cf. § 75). Words like vā'ry, wā'ry, etc., are, however, pronounced with å by many, especially in British usage. The sound (å) remains unchanged when an inflectional ending is added; thus, shâre, shâr'er, shâr'ing.

The sound (å) is also represented, in the ordinary spelling, by e before r, as in there, and in other ways, as in air, bear, heir, prayer, etc.

§ 4. ă as in ădd, hăt, răn'dom, păr'i-ty, etc., is commonly called "short a." It corresponds in tongue position nearly with å as that sound is pronounced by many (§ 3).

The sound (ă) is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in plaid, guar'an-ty, etc.

§ 5. ă as in ăc-count', fi'năl, mad'ăm, etc., occurs frequently in unaccented syllables closed by a consonant, in the ordinary spelling. In formal speech, it has the quality of ă (ăt), but ordinarily it is more or less obscured, often becoming nearly or quite the same as ə in so'fə (§ 8). The italic (ă) indicates the quality of ă (ăt), with allowable colloquial obscuration.

§ 6. ä as in ärm, färˌ fä'ther, älms, pälm is often called "Italian a." It has also been called the "open-throat" vowel, because in pronouncing it the mouth and throat are opened wide, the tongue being lax.

In American usage, ä occurs most often before r. In calf, half, salve, etc., ä is the generally accepted sound, though ă, and even å, are also common in such words (not, however, in calm, palm, balm, etc., in educated speech). The digraph au in laugh, haunt, taunt, etc., is preferably pronounced as ä, although when followed by n, as in haunt, taunt, etc., it is by many given as ô (§ 11). The sound (ä) is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in hearth, guard, etc.

§ 7. ȧ as in stȧff, grȧft, ḋance, com-mȧnd', chȧnt, ȧsk, pȧss, lȧst, pȧth, etc., occurs before ff, ft, nce, nd, nt, sk, sp, ss, st, and th; and in some other cases. The sound thus represented is not the short form of ä in ärt (§ 6). It is medium or long in quantity, and variable in quality between the limits ä (ärt) and ă (ăm), usually more nearly resembling the former, but articulated somewhat further forward in the mouth. It is used by many cultivated speakers, in such words as are here mentioned, as a compromise between the ä used by some and the ă used by others.

§ 8. ə as in ə-bound', cə-rouse', di'ə-dem, so'fə, etc., occurs only in unaccented syllables, usually such as are not closed by a consonant in the ordinary spelling. The sound is that of ȧ in ȧsk, usually with more or less colloquial obscuration toward the sound of ē in ev'ēr (§ 27), such allowable obscuration being indicated by italicizing the letter (ə).

§ 9. A as in all, talk, swarm, wa'ter, etc., is equivalent to ô as in ôrb, bôrn, etc. (§ 59), and is represented by ô in the respelling; as, all (ôl), talk (tôk).

§ 10. A as in was, what, wan'der, swan, qual'i-ty, etc., is equivalent to ŏ as in ŏdd (§ 60), and is represented by ŏ in the respelling; thus, was (wŏz), what (hwŏt).

Au and aw

§ 11. Au, in the ordinary spelling, regularly represents the sound of ô in lôrd (§ 59), as in taught, caustic, haul, etc. It also has the sound of ä, as in aunt, laugh; and in taunt, haunt, etc., as preferably pronounced (§ 6). It never has the sound of ou in house in English words. The common sound of au (ô) is also represented, in the ordinary spelling, by aw, now the usual form where final or before k, l, or n; as in law, saw, hawk, crawl, lawn, etc.

B

§ 12. B as in b̄oy, cab, rob'ber, a'ble, etc., is the voiced labial stop (i. e., consonant formed with stoppage at the lips of the voiced, or intonated, breath). It differs from p (§ 72) only in being uttered with voice, or vocal tone.

B is usually silent after m in the same syllable, as in bomb, climb, thumb, etc.; but is sometimes sounded, as in rhomb. It is usually silent before t (except in compounds, as subtitle, etc.); as in debt, doubt, sub'tle, etc. In a few other cases, also, especially when initial before another consonant, as in bdel'li-um, it is silent.

C

§ 13. C as in cede, cy'press, ac'id, glance, etc., ("soft" c) is identical with s as in see (§ 77), and is indicated by s in the respelling for pronunciation.

C has this sound (s) before e, i, or y; as in cede, ac'id, etc. The c rarely has the sound of z, as in sacrifice and suffice as pronounced by some. Before an i, less often an e, immediately followed by another vowel in the same word, "soft" c commonly takes the sound of sh, either by itself, as in o'ce-an'ic (ō'shē-ăn'ĭk), or by assimilation with the i or e, as in vi'cious (vĭsh'ŭs), o'cean (ō'shən), etc.

§ 14. C as in cat, cold, ac'rid, etc., ("hard" c) has the sound of k, and is represented by k in the respelling.

C has this sound (k) before a, o, or u; before l and r, as in cliff, craft; in the combination ck, as in crack; and at the end of a syllable (if not immediately followed in a succeeding syllable by e, i, or y), as in pic'ture, arc, sanc'tion, disc, zinc, al'ma-nac, vac'ci-nate, etc.; also before e in scep'tic, as sometimes spelled, and before i in scir'rous (pronounced also sĭr'ŭs), and in the irregular spellings arc'ing, zinc'ing, zinc'y, etc.

§ 15. C initial before n occurs in a few words and names from the Greek, and is silent, as in Cni'dus (nī'dŭs). C is also silent in czar, etc., as commonly pronounced; also in vict'uals, in-dict', and in mus'cle, cor'pus-cle, etc.

Ch

§ 16. The most frequent sound of ch, as in chin, church, much, arch, etc., is a consonantal diphthong, commonly analyzed as t + sh (tsh). But these elements are not simply pronounced in succession, without change, as are, for instance, k and s in box (bŏks); they blend into a composite sound in which both elements are changed somewhat. The sound is the voiceless (surd) correlative of j (§ 48). Ch has this sound in all native English words, and is used in the respelling invariably with this value.

Ch often has as an equivalent, in the ordinary spelling, the trigraph tch, at the end of a syllable; as in hatch, watch, satch'el, etc. This sound of ch is also represented, in the ordinary spelling, by ti, as in bas'tion, ques'tion, and, rarely, by te, as in right'eous; also, by t and the initial element of u in na'ture, vul'ture, etc., as commonly colloquially pronounced. (Cf. § 87.) Ch occasionally has the sound of j, as in spin'ach.

§ 17. Ch has the sound of sh in she (§ 81) in words from modern French, as cha-grin', ma-chine', mus-tache', etc.; also, in some words from Old French, in which historically the sound is ch (chop), but in which it has commonly become sh through analogy with more recent borrowings, as in chiv'al-rous, cham-paign' (flat ground).

§ 18. Ch "hard," as in cho'rus, ech'o, etc., has the sound of k, and is represented by k in the respelling.

Ch has its "hard" sound in most words from the Greek, directly or through the Latin, as in cho'rus, ep'och, chyle; also, in most words or names from the Hebrew, as Chaldea, Enoch, Nebuchadrezzar. In a comparatively few such words, the sound of ch as in chop occurs; as chart, cherub, Rachel; also, in the prefix arch-, as in archbishop, archduke; but the k sound remains in architect, archangel, architecture, etc. In some words from foreign languages, the corresponding ch has a fricative ("guttural") sound. (See § 50.)

§ 19. Ch is silent in drachm, schism, yacht, and in fuchsia, as a common plant name.

D

§ 20. D as in day, bed, hard, wed'ded, etc., is the voiced dental (or often alveolar) stop (i. e., consonant formed with stoppage of the voiced, or intonated, breath by placing the point of the tongue against the back of the upper front teeth, or the gums just above). The sound differs from t (§ 82) only in being uttered with voice, or vocal tone.

D, when preceded in the same syllable by a voiceless sound (i. e., one uttered without vocal tone), is pronounced like t; as in hissed (hĭst), looked (lo͝okt). It is silent in the first syllable of Wednesday, as usually pronounced, and in handkerchief and handsome. D often assimilates with a following i, the two taking the sound j (§§ 48, 87).

E

§ 21. ē as in ēve, bē, mēte, etc., commonly called "long e," is the name sound of the letter e in modern English. The sound is formed with the tongue in nearly the same position as for ĭ (§ 44), but slightly raised and tenser, the front of the tongue being raised highèr than for any of the other "front" vowel sounds (ĭ, ā, ĕ, ă, â). A further raising of the tongue, or a slight increase in the force of utterance, by causing audible friction of the breath, turns the sound into a consonant, as y in yes.

This sound is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in Cæ'sar, beam, feet, de-ceive', peo'ple, key, machine', field, Phœ'bus, quay, Por'tu-guese.

§ 22. ĕ as in ĕ-vent', crĕ-ate', so-ci'ĕ-ty, etc., is a modification of ē (ēve) in unaccented syllables. In ordinary speech it is uttered with the tongue slightly lower and less tense than for the accented ē, the sound tending toward that of ĭ (ĭll), which it often becomes in colloquial speech.

§ 23. ĕ as in ĕnd, pĕt, ĕr'ror, etc., commonly called "short e," corresponds nearly to the main part of "ā" (§ 1).

The sound (ĕ), which usually occurs in accented syllables closed with a consonant, is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in any, di-ær'e-sis, said, says, feath'er, heif'er, leop'ard, friend, as/a-fœt'i-da, etc.

§ 24. Short e (ĕ) also occurs in unaccented initial syllables, as in ĕx-cuse', ĕn-large', ĕf-face', etc. In many final unaccented syllables, the sound verges toward that of ĭ in ĭll, as in end'ed, car'pet, hors'es, wool'en, etc., and is given as ĭ by many phoneticians, where others give ĕ, or a sound intermediate between ē and ĭ. In this Dictionary the more formal sound (ĕ) is preferred, although the ĭ sound is allowable colloquially. Otherwise, the ĕ in unaccented syllables usually is obscured toward the sound of ē (ev'ēr). (See §§ 25, 27.)

§ 25. ĕ as in mo'mĕnt, de'cĕn-cy, nov'ĕl, gos'pĕl, etc., usually before n or l, is pronounced in formal speech like ĕ (ĕnd). From this there is an allowable colloquial weakening or obscuration in the direction of ē (ev'ēr, § 27), the vowel sometimes appearing to be almost elided, as in mo'm'nt, nov''l. (Cf. § 26.) The formal sound, together with its allowable obscuration, is indicated by the italic (ĕ).

§ 26. In some words — as eat'en, o'pen, gold'en, shriv'el, etc. — the e is so far reduced that it becomes a mere vocal murmur, or even drops out altogether, leaving to the n or the l the function of the vowel. Such words are marked in the respelling for pronunciation with an apostrophe (') to indicate the reduction or elision of the vowel; thus, eat'en (ēt'n), gold'en (gōl'd'n).

§ 27. ē as in read'ēr, sev'ēr-al, pēr-form', etc., is the sound of unaccented e before r. The tongue position in the articulation of this sound is nearly the same as that for û (§ 88), or ŭ (§ 89), but in pronouncing either û or ŭ the tongue is tenser, making a perceptible difference in the sound, as may be felt and heard by pronouncing such pairs of words as cûr and mak'ĕr, cŭt and sev'ĕr.

The sound (ĕ) is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in al'tar, e-lix'ir, ac'tor, zeph'yr, etc.

§ 28. The sound of e as in fern, err, her, herd, infer', etc., as ordinarily pronounced, is the same as û in ûrn, and is indicated in the respelling by û. (See § 88.)

§ 29. E as in there, where, etc., is identical in sound with â (§ 3), by which it is represented in the respelling.

§ 30. E as in veil, rein, they, etc., with the sound of ā (§ 1), occurs in English words only in the digraph ei (or ey final), and it is, properly speaking, the digraph that represents the sound, and not the single letter.

§ 31. E with consonant value. An unaccented e immediately followed by another vowel often assumes more or less of a consonant y sound, as in right'eous, as pronounced by some, rīt'yŭs. Even with careful speakers, this y sound, however, often assimilates with a preceding t or d or s, or c with the sound of s, modifying its sound more or less, as in right'eous (rī'chŭs, by some rīt'yŭs), gran'deur (grăn'dûr; by some grănd'yĕr, by others grăn'jĕr), o'cean (ō'shăn), nau'seous (nô'shŭs, by some -shĭus), etc. Cf. § 87. The e does not always disappear even when, by partial assimilation, it has changed the sound of the preceding consonant, especially if the accent falls upon the following syllable, as in o'ce-an'ĭc (ō'shē-ăn'ĭk).

§ 32. E silent. When it follows a consonant at the end of a syllable, e is usually silent in modern English, but indicates: (1) Generally, that a preceding vowel is long; as in cāme, tōne, hōme. In many words, however, the preceding vowel is short; as in băde, ol'īve, prom'īse, etc. (2) That a preceding c or g is "soft" (i. e., pronounced as s or j); as in serv'ice, rav'age, etc. A final silent e, also, often occurs after certain consonants not usual in a final position, as v, th (when sounded as in them), and single s (when not the sign of the plural), or z; as in leave, wreathe, mouse, nurse, bronze, etc.

In the ending -ed of the past tense and participle of verbs, the e, except in solemn or poetic speech, is usually elided, as in sealed (sēld), waved (wāvd), hoped (hōpt), unless the verb ends in d or t, as in add'ed, suit'ed. When the e is thus elided in pronunciation, the d following a voiceless consonant (i. e., one uttered without vocal tone) is pronounced as t; as, stopped (stŏpt), hoped (hōpt).

Ee

§ 33. Ee has usually the sound of ē (ēve); as in beet (bēt), deep (dēp). In been, it has usually, in America, the sound of ĭ. In breech'es and cof'fee, it has the sound of ĭ.

Eu, ew

§ 34. Eu regularly has the sound of ū (§ 85), as in feud (fūd), deuce (dūs), or, when unaccented, of ŭ (§ 87), as in eu-phon'ic (ŭ-fŏn'ĭk), etc.

Ew, having usually the same sounds as eu, is common at the end of words or syllables; as in pew (pū), new (nū), etc. It also occurs (rarely) initially and medially; as in ewe (ū), ew'er (ū'ĕr), newt (nūt). After certain consonants, it has the sound of o͞o; as in flew (flo͞o), threw (thro͞o). (Cf. § 86.) It has exceptionally the sound of o͞o; as in sew (so͞o), shew (sho͞o).

F

§ 35. F as in fame, fly, staff, oft, etc., is the voiceless labiodental open consonant (i. e., consonant pronounced by bringing the lower lip and upper teeth lightly together but without complete stoppage of the breath, which is emitted without accompanying voice, or vocal tone). F is the same as v, except that v is pronounced with voice (§ 95).

The commonest equivalent of f in the ordinary spelling is ph (chiefly in words from the Greek), as pha'lanx, pho'to-graph, etc.; the sound being otherwise sometimes represented by gh (§ 40). In of, and usually in hereof, thereof, whereof, f has the sound of v.

G

§ 36. G as in gay, go, gun, is called "hard" g. This sound of g is the voiced guttural, or velar, stop (i. e., consonant pronounced by stopping the voiced, or intonated, breath by contact between the back of the tongue and the back palate). It corresponds to k (§ 49), except that the latter is uttered without voice. As used in the respelling for pronunciation, g has invariably its "hard" sound.

In modern English, g has its "hard" sound: (a) Always at the end of a word; as in hug, hag, tug; also in derivatives of such words even when the g (doubled in the spelling) is followed by e, i, or y, as in rag'ged, drug'gist, fog'gy. (b) Before a, o, or u, or an l, r, or s in the same syllable; as in gay, glad, grow, lin'gual, bags (except in the British gaol, gaoler). (c) In words of Teutonic origin before e and i, as in get, give; also when doubled before y, as in bug'gy, mug'gy. (d) In a few words and names from the Hebrew; as ge'rah, Gid'e-on. The sound of "hard" g, followed by z, is also often represented by x; as in ex-ist' (ĕg-zĭst'), ex-am'ple (ĕg-zăm'p'l). See § 100.

This sound of g is otherwise indicated, in the ordinary spelling, by gu, as in guard, guest; by gh, as in ghost; and by gue final, as in plague.

§ 37. "Soft" g, as in gem, en'gine, gy'rate, has the sound of j (§ 48), and is represented by j in the respelling.

The letter g has this sound usually before e, i, or y, except in words of Teutonic origin (§ 36, c). At the end of a syllable, the sound is usually represented by dg, dge, or ge, as in badg'er, badge, rage.

§ 38. G with sound of zh. In a few words from the French, as rouge, mirage, cortège, etc., g retains its French sound of z in azure.

§ 39. G is silent in modern English before m and n final, and when initial before n; as in phlegm, sign, gnat, gnaw, etc. In the digraph ng, as in sing, the g blends with the n to form a new sound (§ 55).

Gh

§ 40. Gh occurs initially in a few words, in which it has the sound of "hard" g (§ 36); as in ghost, ghost'ly, a-ghast'. In other positions it either has become silent or has the sound of f. It is silent: (a) after i (or ei), as in high, nigh, sleigh, etc.; (b) before a t in the same syllable, as in caught, eight, right, etc. (an exception is draught [drăft]); (c) often at the end of a word or syllable after au or ou, as in daugh'ter, dough, bough, etc. It often has the sound of f after au or ou at the end of a word or syllable, as in laugh, laugh'ter, cough, e-nough', etc. In hough, it has, exceptionally, the sound of k.

H

§ 41. H as in hate, hire, house, hoot, etc., is a simple breath sound, and is often called the aspirate. It usually begins as a weak, voiceless glottal consonant produced by friction of the breath against the vocal cords, while its latter part is articulated with the same position of the vocal organs as for the following vowel.

An h initial in a word is sounded in the best present English, except in heir, honest, honor, hour, and, esp. in America, herb, and their derivatives, while in hostler (when so spelled), humble, humor, present usage is divided, but on the whole favors the sounding of the aspirate. The h is frequently silent at the beginning of a syllable; as in ex-haust', ex-hort', shep'herd, Dur'ham, etc. After a vowel in the same syllable, as in ah, oh, the h is regularly silent. The h is silent in John and phthisic (tĭz'ĭk); and is either silent, or blended with a neighboring sound, in ch, gh, kh, ph, rh, sh, th, and wh.

I

§ 42. ī as in īce, tīme, chīld, etc., commonly called "long ī," is the name sound of the letter i in modern English. The sound (ī) is a diphthong having for its initial element in the best American usage the sound of ä (ärm) or the same sound shortened (as in ar-tis'tic). In some localities, notably the South of England, the initial element lies between ŭ (ŭp) and ĕ (ev'ĕr).

The sound is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in aisle, ay or aye (yes), height, eye, vie, choir, guile, buy, thy, rye.

§ 43. Long i unaccented, as in ī-de'a, dī-am'e-ter, etc., does not differ essentially from ī in īce, but is commonly pronounced more quickly, and is hence somewhat shortened.

§ 44. ĭ as in ĭll, pĭt, ad-mĭt', etc., is commonly called "short i," though formed with nearly the same tongue position as for ē (§ 21), but with the tongue slightly lower, and less tense.

Short i unaccented is usually followed in the same syllable by a consonant, as in cab'ĭn, ĭn-hab'ĭt. Otherwise, as in qual'ĭ-ty. trin'ĭ-ty, dī-vide', etc., the sound tends slightly toward ē (ev'ĕr, § 27), but in careful speech its quality is maintained.

The sound (ĭ) is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in guin'ea, for'eign, sur'feit, car'riage, mis'chief, cir'cuit, etc., and, exceptionally, in Eng'lish, breeches, been (§ 33), wo'men, tor'toise (by some), let'tuce, bus'y; also, colloquially, in add'ed, etc. (Cf. § 24.)

§ 45. I before r, as in fir, bird, irk'some, etc., is the equivalent of û in ûrn (§ 88), and is represented by û in the respelling, as in fir (fûr), bird (bûrd), etc. When unaccented, the sound is equivalent to ē in ev'ĕr; as in ta'pir (tā'pēr), e-lix'ir (ē-lĭk'sēr). (Cf. § 27.)

§ 46. I as in ma-chine', po-lice', etc., occurs in modern English chiefly in words of foreign origin or under foreign influence, and is equivalent to ē in ēve (§ 21), being represented by ē in the respelling for pronunciation.

§ 47. I with consonant value. A short i (ĭ) when closely followed by another vowel often falls into a y sound; as in fil'ial (fil'yăl), gen'ial (jēn'yăl), etc. A preceding "sharp" s (as in sun), "soft" c (as in cede), or sc (as in science), by assimilation with the y sound, commonly takes an sh sound, as in man'sion, vi'cious, con'scious; and a voiced s (as in as) or a z similarly takes a zh sound, as in vi'sion, gla'zier, etc., the i in either case being wholly absorbed. A preceding t is affected in the same way, as in na'tion, par'tial, etc.; but when preceded by a syllable ending in s, the ti (ty) takes a ch (tsh) sound, as in ques'tion, Chris'tian, etc. A g followed by i similarly takes, by fusion with the i sound, the sound of j, as in re'gion; and di in like manner often takes the sound of j, as in sol'dier, cor'dial.

J

§ 48. J as in jar, jest, jute, etc., is a consonantal diphthong, commonly analyzed as d+zh (dzh). But these elements are not simply pronounced in succession, as are, for instance, the sounds of g and z in eggs (ĕgz); they blend into a composite sound in which both elements are somewhat changed. The sound is the voiced (sonant) correlative of ch in chin (cf. § 16).

The equivalents of j, in the ordinary spelling, are "soft" g, ge, and dg(e), by which it is usually represented at the end of a syllable, as in page, badg'er, judge (cf. § 37); exceptions being prej'u-dice, proj'ect, maj'es-ty, and caj'e-put. Also, j (or dj) occurs at the end of a syllable in some foreign words, mostly Oriental. Other equivalents of j, in the ordinary spelling, are di as in sol'dier, ge as in sur'geon, gi as in re'gion. (Cf. §§ 47, 87.) In hal-lelujah, j has the sound of y.

K

§ 49. K as in kite, ark, oak, etc., is the voiceless guttural, or velar, stop, formed in the same manner as "hard" g (§ 36), but uttered without voice, or vocal tone.

The sound (k) is also otherwise indicated, in the ordinary spelling, as in call, choir, hough (hŏk), khan, co-quet′, an-tique′, sacque, queen. The sound is also a component of one of the sounds commonly represented, in the ordinary spelling, by x (§ 99). Before n in the same syllable, k is now silent in English; as in knot, knee, etc. Ck has the sound of k, as in tack, as has lk, usually, after the sound of a in all (ôl) or of o͞ in o͞ld, as in walk, folk, etc.

§ 50. A small capital k (thus, ᴋ) is used in the respelling to indicate any of certain fricative sounds, often popularly called "gutturals," which occur in German, Scottish, Dutch, and other languages.

These sounds are of two typical classes: (a) The palatal fricative is made with the tongue nearly in position for y in yes, but raised closer to the palate, so that there is more distinctly audible friction. It may be imitated by exaggerating the slightly fricative sound of y in yes (without uttering voice), or of h in hue; or by pronouncing k in key so that the breath passes through a very narrow passage, instead of being entirely stopped between the tongue and the palate. This sound is typically that of ch in standard German "ich," and commonly occurs after or before "front" vowels, as i, e, and after consonants. (b) The guttural fricative is usually deeper and stronger than the palatal, and somewhat resembles a light hawking, or clearing of the throat. It may be imitated by pronouncing c in cow, with the closure between the back of the tongue and the palate loosened so that the breath passes through a very narrow passage, instead of being entirely stopped. This sound is typically that of ch in standard German "ach," and commonly occurs after or before "back" vowels, as a, o, u.

The nature of the preceding or the succeeding sound sufficiently determines the character of these fricative sounds. Those not familiar with the foreign pronunciation may pronounce the ᴋ as simple k.

L

§ 51. L as in lie, low, ill, clay, etc., is normally formed with partial closure of the oral passage by contact of the point of the tongue with the back upper gums at the same place as for d (§ 20) and t (§ 82), the voiced (intonated) breath passing out either at both sides or at one side, whence it has been called the point-divided, or point-side, consonant. L has no voiceless correlative in English.

In certain combinations the l, originally sounded, has regularly become silent, as in would, alms, balm, salmon, almond, half, salve, talk, folk, and like words, and their derivatives. L often fulfills the office of a vowel in an unaccented syllable, as in bat′tle (băt′l), bus′tle (bŭs′l), etc. (Cf. § 26.)

M

§ 52. M as in me, tame, smile, etc., is the voiced labial nasal (labionasal) consonant, formed by bringing the lips together, as for b and p, at the same time lowering the soft palate, and thus allowing the intonated breath, or voice, to pass into or through the nasal passage.

Initial m before n, occurring in a few words from the Greek, is silent; as in mne-mon′ics (nē-mŏn′ĭks).

N

§ 53. N as in none, inn, ten, etc., is the voiced dental nasal (dentinasal) consonant, formed with closure of the oral passage by the tongue in the same position as for d and t, while, at the same time, the soft palate is lowered, allowing the intonated breath, or voice, to pass into or through the nasal passage. N often serves as a vowel in unaccented syllables, as in eat′en (ēt′n). (Cf. § 26.)

After m, a final n is silent, as in hymn, condemn, etc.; but when a suffix is added to such a word, the n is usually sounded, as in hym-nol′o-gy, con′dem-na′tion, au-tum′nal, etc. In damned, damning, limning, usage is divided; in condemning, contemning, hymning, condemner, contemner, present usage favors the silent n. In kiln the n is usually silent. In the initial combinations kn, pn, mn, only the n is now sounded in English, as in know, pneumatic (cf. § 72), mnemonics.

§ 54. A small capital n (thus, ɴ) is used in the respelling to indicate that a preceding vowel is pronounced as a nasal, as in French bon (bôɴ).

There are four such nasal vowels in French, indicated by a following n in the ordinary spelling (not if the n is doubled or followed by a vowel in the same syllable), as in the phrase un bon vin blanc (ŭɴ bôɴ vĂɴ blĀɴ), "a good white wine." These are pronounced by opening the mouth very wide and uttering the vowels as here marked, while allowing the soft palate to hang loose, the breath or voice passing out through both nose and mouth, only the vowel being pronounced in any case, the printed n merely indicating the nasalization. Many English-speaking people substitute for such nasal vowels similar, but not nasalized, vowels followed by the English nasal consonant sound ng, or n as in ink (§ 55) and this, though inaccurate, is allowable for those who find the true nasal vowels too difficult. Similar nasal vowels occur in some other languages, as Portuguese.

ŋ, ng

§ 55. Ng as in sing, hang, bang′ing, etc., is a nasal consonant sound formed with complete closure between the back of the tongue and the soft palate, in the same manner as for "hard" g (§ 36), and is hence called the guttural, or velar, nasal. In its pronunciation the sounds of n and g are so closely blended that neither can be distinguished.

The digraph occurs only at the end of syllables; as in sing, sing′er, hang, etc.; or with ue added, as in tongue. An added inflection usually causes no change; as in sing′er, hang′ing, etc.; but in the comparatives and superlatives of long, young, etc., the g goes, with the sound of "hard" g, with the inflection, while the n takes to itself the ng sound; as in lon′ger, lon′gest. When ng is followed in the same syllable by a silent e, as in flange, range, it does not take the sound as in sing, but is simple n, followed by the sound of ge (= j).

At the end of an accented syllable, an n followed immediately, either in the same or the succeeding syllable, by the sound of k or of "hard" g (go), commonly takes more or less of the ng sound (being marked in the respelling for pronunciation with ŋ); as in ink (iŋk), fin′ger (fĭŋ′ger), etc.; also, often, in unaccented syllables, as in e′lon-ga′tion, pro′lon-ga′tion, etc.

The n does not take this sound (ŋ) in the prefixes in-, en-, on-, un-, non-.

O

§ 56. o͞ as in o͞ld, no͞te, bo͞ne, etc., commonly called "long o," is the name sound of the letter o in modern English. The main part of the sound (o͞) in standard English is pronounced with the back of the tongue raised toward the soft palate, its maximum elevation being about midway between that for ô (ôrb, § 59) and that for o͝o (fo͝od, § 68). In its pronunciation the lips are contracted to a circular opening. In addition to this main element, the vowel commonly takes a distinct vanishing sound of o͝o (fo͝ot), or even o͞o (fo͞od), making it more or less diphthongal. This diphthongal quality is more marked in the pronunciation of some localities than in that of others. (Cf. § 1.)

The sound (o͞) is otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in roam, foe, oh, door, grow, owe, haut′boy, beau, yeo′man, sew.

§ 57. When accented before r, o͞ commonly takes as its vanishing sound a slight sound as of ĕ in ev′ĕr (§ 27), instead of o͝o or o͞o. By some in America, and by many in England, the o͞ in this position is pronounced nearly or quite like ô (§ 59); as in glo′ry, pork, etc.

§ 58. ŏ as in ŏ-bey′, pŏ-et′ic, a-nat′ŏ-my, etc., differs from o͞ (o͞ld) not only in the (usual) omission of the vanishing sound, but also in that the tongue takes for ŏ a slightly lower position and is laxer. In careful pronunciation, the sound is almost that of o͞.

§ 59. ô as in ôrb, lôrd, ôr′der, etc., is formed with nearly the same tongue position as "short o" (§ 60), but in pronouncing it the tongue is tenser.

As indicated by the letter o followed by r in the same syllable, the sound (ô) is mostly limited to accented syllables with the r not immediately followed by a vowel or another r in the same word (inflected words, as ab-hôr'ring, ab-hôr'rer, excepted). Otherwise the sound is usually ŏ, as in fŏr'eign, ŏr'ange, tŏr'rid, or ō, as in mōre, glō'ry, dōor; but all these words are pronounced with ô by many speakers (cf. § 57).

The sound (ô) is also represented, in the ordinary spelling, by a in certain positions, as in swarm, all, talk, wa'ter, etc.; and otherwise as in draw, awe, haul, ex-traor'dina-ry, George, etc.

§ 60. ŏ as in nŏt, ŏdd, pŏd, etc., is commonly called "short o." The sound is formed with nearly the same tongue position as for ô (§ 59), but in its pronunciation the tongue is laxer.

In the pronunciation of this pair of vowels (ô, ŏ) the back of the tongue (the part active in their formation) is lower than for any of the other "back" vowels (ō, ä, o͝o, o͝o) and the lips are rounded but slightly. "Short o" sometimes occurs in unaccented syllables, as in ma'crŏn, car'bŏn, etc., but here, except in very formal speech, it is usually more or less obscured, as in cŏn-clude', ŏc-cur', etc. (§ 61). Such obscuration is more marked in most final unaccented syllables, the vowel often disappearing altogether, leaving to the consonant the function of a vowel, as in cot'ton (kŏt'n), but'ton (bŭt'n), etc. (Cf. § 26.)

§ 61. ŏ as in ŏc-cur', cŏn-nect', rec'ŏl-lect', etc., has the sound of ŏ in ŏdd (§ 60) in formal speech, but in ordinary speech the sound is more or less obscured, such allowable obscuration being indicated by making the lett italic.

§ 62. ô as in sôft, côst, gône, clôth, etc., is intermediate between ô in ôrb (§ 59) and ŏ in ŏdd (§ 60). The o in such words is pronounced by some as ô, by others as ŏ, but properly takes the medial sound here indicated.

§ 63. O as in do (do͞o), prove (pro͞ov), tomb (to͞om), etc., is equivalent to o͞o in fo͞od (§ 68), and is indicated by o͞o in the respelling.

§ 64. O as in wolf (wo͝olf), wom'an (wo͝om'ăn), etc., is equivalent to o͝o in fo͝ot (§ 69), and is represented by o͝o in the respelling.

§ 65. O as in son (sŭn), done (dŭn), oth'er (ŭth'ĕr), etc., is equivalent to ŭ in ŭp (§ 89), and is indicated by ŭ in the respelling. The o in na'tion (nā'shŭn), cau'tion (kô'shŭn), etc., has this sound, usually more or less obscured in ordinary speech, as indicated by the italic ŭ. (Cf. § 90.)

§ 66. O as in worm (wûrm), work (wûrk), world (wûrld), etc., occurs only before r in accented syllables, and is equivalent to û in ûrn (§ 88).

Oo

§ 67. Oo in modern English regularly has the sounds of o͞o as in bo͞ot (§ 68), and o͝o in fo͝ot (§ 69); exceptionally it has the sound of ŭ in flood (flŭd), blood (blŭd), etc., (§ 89), and of ō (ōld), as in door (dōr), floor (flōr), etc. (§ 57).

§ 68. o͞o as in mo͞on, fo͞od, to͞ot, etc., is articulated with the back of the tongue raised close to the back palate and the lips firmly and closely rounded. The height of the tongue and the degree of lip rounding are greater than for any of the other "back" vowels (ä, ō, ô, ŏ). (Cf. § 60.)

The sound (o͞o) is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in rude, group, drew, fruit, do, canoe, rheum, manœuvre.

§ 69. o͝o as in fo͝ot, go͝od, cro͝ok is called the short of o͞o, although the two sounds differ not only in quantity, but also somewhat in quality. The o͝o is formed with nearly the same tongue position as o͞o, but in pronouncing it the tongue is slightly lower and less tense.

The sound (o͝o) is also commonly represented, in the ordinary spelling, by u, as in full (fo͝ol), pull (po͝ol), etc.; and exceptionally by o, as in wolf, woman, and by ou, as in would, could.

Oi and oy

§ 70. Oi regularly represents the diphthong heard in oil, coil, etc., and is used in the respelling always with this value. Its first element, which takes the accent, is approximately ô and its final element is ĭ, the elements being pronounced in a single wave of sound (thus, ôĭ).

In the ordinary spelling, oi exceptionally represents several other sounds; as in cham'ois, av'oir-du-pois', choir, tor'toise, etc. The diphthongal sound of oi when final is commonly represented, in the ordinary spelling, by oy, as in boy (boi), toy (toi), etc.

Ou and ow

§ 71. Ou in modern English regularly represents the diphthong heard in out, a-bout', house, a sound never represented by au in English. This sound of ou is approximately ä (ärt) + o͝o (bo͝ok), pronounced in one wave of sound, with the accent on the first element (ä'o͝o). The diphthong is used in the respelling always with this value.

In the ordinary spelling, ou exceptionally represents several other sounds; as in soup, brought, soul, cou'ple, griev'ous. The diphthongal sound as in out is also represented by ow, in the ordinary spelling, especially when final, as in owl, cow, prow, etc. Ow also has the sound of ō (ōld), as in know, bowl.

P

§ 72. P as in pea, pay, cup, happy, etc., is the voiceless labial stop, differing from b (§ 12) only in the absence of voice, or vocal tone. Both p and b have the same articulative position as the nasal m (§ 52).

The letter p is silent when initial before s, sh, and t, as in psalm, pshaw, ptarmigan, and, usually, before n in words from the Greek, as pneu-mat'ic, pneu-mo'ni-a, etc., though some scholars pronounce the p in words of the latter class, except the more common ones. It is also silent in raspberry, receipt, sempstress, accompt, corps, and their derivatives.

Ph

§ 73. Ph occurs chiefly in words of Greek derivation. It usually has the sound of f as in five (§ 35), and is represented by f in the respelling. Exceptionally, it has the sound v, as in Stephen, and in nephew as pronounced by some. In diph'thong, diph-the'ri-a, naph'tha, etc., the pronunciation with f is the best present usage.

Q

§ 74. Q is not used in the respelling. In the ordinary spelling, it is in all cases followed by u, and the two letters together commonly have the sound of kw, as in queen, con'quest, etc. They have the sound of k in a few words, mostly from the French, as in coquette, etiquette, etc., and in the ending que, as in antique, burlesque, etc.

R

§ 75. R as in room, rope, merry, is usually pronounced in English as an open, voiced (sonant) consonant, in the articulation of which the point of the tongue is raised toward, but not to, the back of the upper front teeth, or the hard palate, the exact position and height varying somewhat according to the adjacent sounds. The r also differs quite markedly as pronounced in different sections, but is now rarely trilled in standard English, though it still is in the Scottish and some other dialects, and as it usually is in foreign languages. In some localities, especially in the South of England and in New England, r is commonly omitted in certain positions or is replaced by a vowel sound, as of ĕ in ev'ĕr (§ 27), even by educated speakers.

R is never preceded by the regular short sound of a vowel in an accented syllable, except when the r ends a syllable and is followed in the succeeding syllable of the same word by a vowel or another r, as in măr'ry, vĕr'y, spĭr'it, etc., — and not even then if there is a primitive form ending in r; as in bar, bar'ring; in-fer', in-fer'ring, etc.

§ 76. S, either alone or by assimilation with a following element, represents four sounds in the ordinary spelling, all of which are open dental fricatives (i. e., consonants formed by bringing the tongue near enough to the teeth to cause decided friction of the breath, but not complete closure). Two of the sounds are voiceless, or surd, as in sun (sŭn), sure (shōōr), and two voiced, or sonant, as in has (hăz), vi'sion (vĭzh'ŭn).

§ 77. (1) Voiceless, or surd, s ("sharp" s), as in see, hiss, basis, etc., is the primary sound of the letter, which is used in the respelling invariably with this value. The sound is variously formed by different speakers. It is most often pronounced with a rather narrow aperture between the blade of the tongue and the back of the upper front teeth, or the gums just above. The unintonated breath is forced through this aperture, and, impinging upon the edges of the teeth, produces the sound commonly called "hissing." If the sound is clear it is not advisable to change the usual tongue position.

This sound of s is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, by c "soft" (§ 13), as in cell, vice; by sc, as in scene, science; by sch, as in schism.

§ 78. (2) Voiced, or sonant, s ("soft" s), as in is, has, easy, accuse, etc., is the same sound as z (zeal, § 105), and is represented by z in the respelling for pronunciation. It is formed with the same tongue position as for "sharp" s, but the tongue is more tense for the voiced sound.

The s is sometimes voiced as the final sound of verbs, and voiceless as the final sound of the cognate nouns or adjectives; as in use, abuse, house, diffuse, close, etc.

§ 79. (3) S sometimes takes the sound of sh (§ 81), by assimilation with a following i or y sound, as in mansion, sure, sugar, censure, etc. (§§ 47, 87). In the case of a doubled s, the first s is assimilated to the second; as in pas'sion (păsh'ŭn), is'sue (ĭsh'ū), etc. In a few words s takes the sh sound while leaving the following vowel unchanged; as in one pronunciation of A'si-a (ā'shĭ-ȧ; ā'shȧ), in nau'se-a (nô'shē-ȧ), o'ce-an'ic (ō'shē-ăn'ĭk), etc.

§ 80. (4) S, when preceded by a vowel in an accented syllable, takes the sound of zh as in az'ure (§ 106) by assimilation with a following i or y sound; as in fu'sion, de-ci'sion, ex-plo'sion, etc. When doubled in this position, the first s is assimilated to the second (cf. § 79); as in ab-scis'sion (ăb-sĭzh'ŭn), re-scis'sion (rē-sĭzh'ŭn).

Sh

§ 81. Sh as in she, rash, usher, etc., is a voiceless dental fricative (i. e., consonant formed by narrowing the oral passage near the teeth so that the unintonated breath is forced out with audible friction). It is formed with a rather narrow opening between the blade of the tongue and the back upper gums, somewhat further back than for s (§ 77). The current of air is broader, and the resulting sound fuller and softer, than in the case of s. The sound (sh) is a simple element, the voiceless correlative of zh in azure (§ 106).

This sound is otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, by c or s with or before e or i (§§ 13, 79); by sc or t with or before i (§§ 47, 87); by the s element of x combined with a following i (§ 99); by chs in fuch'si-a (fū'shĭ-ȧ; -shȧ), as a common plant name, and by sch in schist, etc.

§ 82. T as in tie, it, note, etc., is the voiceless dental (or often alveolar) stop, corresponding to d (§ 20), but uttered without voice, or intonated breath.

In combination with a following i, or the initial element of a ū or ů (§§ 47, 87), t often has the sound of sh, as in na'tion, mo'tion, etc., or of ch, as in ques'tion, na'ture, etc. The sound of t is otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, by th (§ 84, 3); also by the verb inflection -ed in certain positions (§ 20). The t is silent in Matthew, mortgage, hautboy, chasten, hasten, often, listen, etc.

Th

§ 83. Th has two chief sounds: one voiceless (surd) as in thin, birth, etc., marked with plain th in the respelling for pronunciation; the other voiced (sonant) as in the, than, breathe, etc., marked th; thus: thē, thăn. Both sounds have the same tongue position, which varies slightly with different speakers, the point of the tongue being brought against or near or between the edges of the teeth, producing a "lisping" sound.

§ 84. (1) The plural of nouns ending in voiceless th in the singular usually retains the voiceless th, especially after a short vowel or a consonant, as in breaths, deaths, myths, breadths, etc., but in some cases, esp. when following a long vowel, the plural has preferably th, as in baths, cloths, la̱ths, moths, mouths, oaths, paths, sheaths, truths, wreaths.

(2) Verbs and nouns ending in th often differ in pronunciation, the noun having the th, the verb the th, sound; as mouth, n. & v., south, n. & v., etc. The voiced sound in the verb is often indicated by a final silent e; as breath, n., breathe, v.; wreath, wreathe; bath, bathe, etc.

(3) Th has exceptionally the sound of t in thyme, Thomas, Thames (Eng.), Esther, and, with ph, in phthisic. It is commonly silent in isthmus and asthma.

U

§ 85. ū as in ūse, pūre, cūbe, mū'sic, hū'man, etc., commonly called "long u," is the name sound of the letter u in modern English. The sound varies considerably, not only with different speakers, but also in the pronunciation of the same person, according to its position with reference to other sounds. The main element of ū is always the sound of o͞o (fo͞od), which in a full pronunciation of the ū is preceded by the sound of y (yes). In certain positions the initial element becomes ĭ (ĭll), often so much lightened as to be scarcely audible, and in some positions disappears altogether, leaving simply o͞o (see § 86).

At the beginning of a syllable, as in use, un'ion, disun'ion, etc., the initial element of the ū is y (yes), the ū in such cases sounding the same as you. Otherwise the y element comes in most clearly after p, b, m, v, f, c "hard" (= k), and g "hard" (as in go); as in pure, bu'reau, beau'ty, mute, view (vū), fu'tile, cube, ague. After n, it is less prominent, often becoming ĭ (ĭll); as in new (nū), nu'mer-ous. After d, l (except as below, § 86), s, t, and th, as in duke, lute, suit, as-sume', tune, enthu'si-asm, the y sound comes in with more difficulty, and the initial element usually becomes i, but is not, however, properly entirely omitted.

The sound (ū) has various equivalents in the ordinary spelling, as in beauty, feud, pew, ewe, lieu, view, cue, suit, yule, yew, you.

§ 86. After r, as in rude (ro͞od), true (tro͞o), u is now pronounced as simple o͞o in the best usage. The same is true of the u after the sound of sh, as in sure (sho͞or), chute (sho͞ot), and, usually, after l preceded by another consonant, as in blue (blo͞o), flute (flo͞ot), and after j, as in ju'ry (jo͞o'rĭ).

§ 87. ů as in ů-nite', val'ů-a-ble, etc., is a modification of ū, in unaccented syllables. It differs from ū by taking for the final and main element the sound of o͝o (fo͝ot).

A preceding t tends to assimilate with the y or i element of the ů, the two together forming a more or less clear ch sound; as in na'ture, pic'ture, nat'u-ral. A preceding d in like manner tends to assimilate with the y or i element, the two forming a more or less clear j sound; as in ver'dure, grad'u-al. The pronunciation of such words with ch and j, though common, is considered colloquial, and they are marked in this Dictionary with a tie bar connecting the t or d with the following ů; as in na'ture (nā'tu̱r), nat'u-ral (năt'u̱-rȧl). The tendency to assimilation is thus shown, and the pronunciation with the sounds of ch and j, as nā'chur, năch'u-ral, ver'jur (with u pronounced as o͝o, often obscured to ĕ in ev'er) may be considered allowable in colloquial speech. A preceding s in a syllable not initial (as in cen'sure, sen'su-al) commonly takes an sh sound, and a preceding z or a voiced s (as in az'ure, lei'sure, cas'u-al) a zh sound. The preceding s usually remains unchanged in initial, and sometimes in medial, syllables; as in su-preme', con'su-lar, etc. But in su'gar (sho͝og'ẽr), sure (sho͞or), and their derivatives the assimilation occurs.

§ 88. û as in ûrn, ûrge, hûrl, etc., varies somewhat with different speakers and as occurring in different positions. The sound (û) occurs in standard English only in syllables under some degree of accent, and before r in the same syllable (but not when the r is doubled, as in hŭr′ry; except in derivatives, as fûr′ry).

Orthoëpists have long divided words containing this sound (û) into two groups, one typified by such words as her, fern, bird, etc., the other by urn, burn, etc., and have considered those of the first group to have a sound produced somewhat further forward in the mouth than is that of the second. But the great majority of English-speaking people do not make the distinction. Most phoneticians of the present day regard the words of both groups as having the same sound, and no distinction is made in this Dictionary. In articulating this sound the tongue lies nearly flat in the mouth, neither front nor back articulation predominating, but it is tenser than for ē in mak′ēr (§ 27).

The sound (û) is variously represented, in the ordinary spelling, otherwise than by u; as in fern, earn, bird, word, journal, worthy, myrrh, etc.

§ 89. ŭ as in ŭp, ŭs, ŭn′der, etc., is called "short u." The sound is formed with the tongue in nearly the same position as for ē in ev′ĕr (§ 27), but slightly retracted and tenser. The vowel sometimes occurs unaccented, as in the prefix un-, but otherwise is usually more or less obscured in pronunciation when unaccented. (See § 90.)

The sound (ŭ) is also otherwise represented, in the ordinary spelling, as in son, does, blood, touch, etc.

§ 90. ŭ as in cir′cŭs, sŭb-mit′, is a variation of ŭ (§ 89), occurring unaccented. In formal speech it is often given as ŭ, but ordinarily it is lightened and obscured, readily falling into the sound of ē in ev′ĕr (§ 27). The usual colloquial lightening is indicated by making the u italic (ŭ).

The ou in pi′ous, etc., oi in por′poise, eo in dun′geon, etc., the final element of the eou in right′eous, etc., and of iou in gra′cious, etc., and the o in at′om, irk′some, na′tion, etc., also have this sound. (Cf. § 65.)

§ 91. ü as in French menu (mē-nü′), German grün, etc., occurs only in foreign loan words not yet naturalized. The French sound may be imitated by firmly rounding the lips as if to pronounce o͝o (mo͝on), and then, while holding the lips in this position, pronouncing ē (ēve). The German sound is in some words the same as the French, in others it is approximately ĭ (ĭll) pronounced with somewhat less rounding of the lips.

§ 92. U as in bull, put, push, etc., has the same sound as o͝o in fo͝ot (§ 69), and is indicated by o͝o in the respelling; thus, bull (bo͝ol), push (po͝osh). The u in su′gar (sho͝og′ĕr) also takes this sound after the sound of sh. This sound of u occurs unaccented in the syllable ful; as in joy′ful, ful-fill′, etc. After r, as in fru-gal′i-ty, the unaccented sound often becomes o͝o, but usually, in deliberate speech, retains more of the quality of o͝o.

§ 93. A silent u often occurs after g, which is then always "hard" (as in go); as in guard, guess, plague. For u silent after q, see § 74.

§ 94. U with consonant value, equivalent to w, often occurs after q or hard g (go) and before another vowel, as in qual′i-ty, quite, ques′tion, gua′no, lan′guage, etc.; also after s, as per-suade′, suite, etc.

V

§ 95. V as in vain, ever, live, etc., is the voiced labio-dental open consonant, correlative of f, from which it differs only in being uttered with voice, or vocal tone. (See § 35.)

W

§ 96. W as in we, wet, dwarf, twin, etc., is a voiced labial open consonant (i. e., consonant pronounced with the lips brought close together so as to cause friction, but not complete stoppage, of the voiced, or intonated, breath). The sound is produced with so little audible friction as closely to resemble a vowel, and is classed as a semivowel. It has a close relationship to o͝o and o͞o, the highest and closest of the "back" vowels (§§ 68, 69). A slight further elevation of the tongue from the o͞o position, or an increase in the force of utterance, produces the consonantal friction of w. Thus for w, as for o͞o, there is not only rounding of the lips, but also a constriction between the back of the tongue and the palate. The w, therefore, has two places of articulation, and is a back, or guttural, as well as a labial (labiogutturaI) consonant, though commonly classed as a labial.

§ 97. When not silent or forming part of a diphthong, w is always followed by a vowel. Its sound is sometimes represented by u before a vowel, as in quail, lan′guage (§ 94). After a vowel in the same syllable, the w either forms a diphthong with the vowel, as in cow, town, few; or is silent, as in glow, mow, sometimes determining the vowel sound, as in awe, law. W is silent before r in the same syllable, as in wring, wrote, etc.; also in answer, sword, toward, two, and in who, whom, whoop, etc.

Wh

§ 98. Wh as in when, what, which, is usually pronounced as h + a voiceless w, no voice, or vocal tone, being heard until the beginning of the following vowel. By some it is regarded simply as a voiceless (surd) w. In this Dictionary it is indicated by the respelling hw, which represents the usually accepted sound.

X

§ 99. The voiceless (surd) sound of x, as in box, wax, ex-claim′, etc., is equivalent to ks, by which it is represented in the respelling. This, the commoner sound of x, occurs usually in accented syllables, or when the x is followed by a sounded consonant. In such words as anx′ious, lux′u-ry, the s component of the x takes the sound of sh by assimilation with the following sound of i or y (§§ 47, 87).

§ 100. The voiced (sonant) sound of x, as in ex-ist′, ex-alt′, ex-haŭst′, ex-hib′it, etc., is equivalent to gz, by which it is represented in the respelling. The x usually takes this sound when unaccented and followed by an accented syllable beginning with a vowel or a silent h.

§ 101. When initial in a word or syllable, x has the sound of z (zeal); as in xan′thic, xe′bec, etc.

Y

§ 102. Y as a consonant (as in yes), with which value it is invariably used in the respelling, is a voiced (sonant) palatal fricative (i.e., consonant pronounced with a passage between the blade of the tongue and the palate narrow enough to cause audible friction of voice, or intonated, breath). The friction of y, however, is slight. In pronouncing consonant y, the tongue has nearly the same position as for ē (§ 21), but is raised slightly and more of it is involved in forming the constricted passage. The sound is sometimes represented by i (§ 47), and also, less often, by e (§ 31). Y, consonant, occurs usually at the beginning of a syllable; at the end or in the middle, it is more often a vowel. (Cf. § 104.)

§ 103. As a vowel, y has four sounds: (a) y = ī, as in de-fy′, style, hy-e′na; (b) y = ĭ, as in nymph, lyr′ic, pit′y (also ey final, as in hon′ey, mon′key); (c) y = û, as in myrrh, myr′tle; (d) y = ē, as in zeph′yr, etc. The y, therefore, as a vowel, has all the sounds of i, except ē as in pique (pēk). These sounds of y are replaced in the respelling by the various equivalents as here given.

§ 104. Y is classed with w as a semivowel, because of its use, in the ordinary spelling, both as a consonant and as a vowel, but it differs from w in that it often is the only vowel in a syllable; as in my, sky, myth, etc. The y is also interchangeable with i in diphthongs and digraphs, which usually have the y when final; as, ai, ay; ei, ey; oi, oy.

Z

§ 105. Z as in zeal, fro′zen, diz′zy, etc., is ordinarily a voiced (sonant) dental fricative, the voiced correlative of "sharp" s (§ 77). The sound is often represented, in the ordinary spelling, by s (§ 78); rarely, by c (§ 13).

§ 106. In some words z, by assimilation with a following i or y sound, takes a sound (zh) which is the voiced (sonant) correlative of sh (§ 81); as in az'ure, sei'zure, etc. (Cf. §§ 47, 87.) The same sound is represented by si in fu'sion, etc. (§ 80); by ti, exceptionally, in the preferred pronunciation of tran-si'tion; and by g in rouge, etc. (§ 38).

SOUNDS CLASSIFIED ACCORDING TO PLACE OR MANNER OF FORMATION

VOWEL SOUNDS

	Back	Mixed	Front
High	o͝o (fo͝od) o͝o (fo͝ot)		ē (ēve) ĭ (Ill)	High
Mid	ō (ōld) ä (ärt)	ĕ (evĕr) ŭ (ŭp)	ā (āle) ĕ (mĕn)	Mid
Low	ô (ôrb) ŏ (nŏt)	û (tûrn)	â (câre) ă (măn)	Low

EXPLANATIONS: "Front" vowels are such as are pronounced with the front of the tongue more or less raised toward the palate, forming a place of constriction at the front of the mouth. "Back" vowels are such as are pronounced with the back of the tongue similarly more or less raised toward the palate at the back of the mouth. "Mixed" vowels are those in which neither "front" nor "back" articulation predominates. "High," "mid," and "low" refer to the "height" of the tongue, that is, its relative distance from the palate at the place of constriction, the raising and lowering of the tongue being accompanied by raising and lowering of the lower jaw.

....	....	....	h	....	Same position as following vowel. Cf. § 41. (Aspirate.)

NOTES: [1] See §§ 96, 98. [2] See § 75. [3] ch (chop) and j (jet) are compound consonants, equivalent respectively to tsh and dzh (§§ 16, 48), and the place of formation for each therefore shifts during its pronunciation, beginning with that of t or d and moving into that of sh or zh, the latter, however, being the most characteristic. So, also, x (§ 99) combines the positions of k (or g) and s. [4] The place of formation for k and g varies widely according to the vowel which precedes or follows, as in key or gim'let, call or go, but the sounds are usually classed as gutturals, or velars.

EXPLANATIONS: "Voiced" consonants, or sonants, are consonants pronounced with voice, or vocal tone. "Voiceless" consonants, or surds, are consonants that are uttered with breath only, without voice, or vocal tone. "Stopped" consonants, or stops, are consonants in the pronunciation of which the voice or breath is completely stopped momentarily at some point in the mouth passage. "Open" consonants are those in the pronunciation of which, though the passage is more or less impeded, the voice or breath issues through the mouth or nose with no complete stoppage, or break.

ASSIMILATION OF SOUNDS

§ 107. When a voiced (sonant) consonant and a voiceless (surd) consonant come together in the same syllable, it is often difficult to preserve each in its regular sound. Thus, in cats the voiceless s is easily pronounced after the voiceless t, but in dogs the s takes more naturally its voiced sound (= z) after the voiced sound g. Such conformation of one sound to another, called assimilation, is a marked characteristic of English. Four common inflectional terminations come under its influence; namely: (1) Possessives in s, as maid's (mādz). (2) Plurals in s, as tubs (tŭbz), groves (grōvz). (3) S in the third person singular of verbs, as loads (lōdz), smooths (smo͞oŧhz). (4) Preterits and participles in d preceded by e mute, as in dashed (dăsht). Usually, it is the second consonant that is assimilated to the first, but in some cases it is the reverse, as in spasm (spăz'm), prism (prĭz'm). Assimilation is sometimes reflected in the ordinary spelling, as in leapt, spelt, etc., instead of leaped, spelled, etc. For other forms of assimilation see §§ 13, 31, 47, 79, 80, 87, 99, 106.

DUPLICATION OF CONSONANTS

§ 108. In many words, a consonant is doubled between two vowels, in the ordinary spelling, although in pronunciation it is sounded but once. In banner, for example, it is possible to utter two complete n sounds only by pronouncing ban, then intermitting the voice entirely, opening the organs, and closing them a second time. But as the word is ordinarily pronounced the vocal organs are closed only once between the first and second syllables, and, moreover, the n position is not held long enough to produce the acoustic effect of a doubled sound. Hence, in all such cases, when a consonant is doubled in the ordinary spelling, to indicate that a preceding vowel is short, as in banner, rob- bing, madden, letter, horrid, it is represented by the single consonant in the respelling for pronunciation.

In many derived words, however, in which the primitive ends or begins with the same letter as that with which an added suffix or a prefix of English origin respectively begins or ends, as in soulless, foully, keenness, misstep, outtravel, unnatural, the position of the doubled consonant is held long enough to make upon the ear the impression of a doubled consonant, though there rarely is any actual pause or break between the two consonant sounds. The same effect occurs in compound words in which the second part begins with the same sound as that with which the first part ends, as in headdress, nighttime. In all such cases as those mentioned in this paragraph, the consonant is written twice in the respelling.

ACCENT

§ 109. Accent (stress) is a special articulative effort distinguishing certain syllables of words or phrases from the others by a greater distinctness and loudness of pronunciation. There are various degrees of accent, only two of which need be marked. These are the primary, as in in-tend′, where the full force of the voice is on the last syllable, and the secondary, as in su′per-in-tend′, where the first syllable has a stress greater than that laid on the second and third syllables, but less than that laid on the last. In some words two subordinate accents are shown, as in in-com′pre-hen′si-bil′i-ty. While there are no fixed rules for English accent, the following general principles may be mentioned:

(1) English accent is recessive; that is, the general tendency of the language is to carry the chief accent back toward or to the first syllable. The working of this principle is seen in such words as bal′co-ny, formerly bal-co′ny, con′fiscate, v., formerly, and still by some, con-fis′cate, etc. Often, the struggle between this principle and former usage is reflected in varying present usage, as in ad′ver-tize and ad-ver-tize′, il′lus-trate and il-lus′trate, etc.

(2) The general tendency of accent, whether primary or secondary, is to shorten all vowels but u, when further back than the penultimate syllable, as in ten′ement, an′atom′ical, person′ifica′tion, etc. (though we say lu′bricate, not lub′ricate; su′perabun′dant, not sup′erabun′dant, etc.). This tendency generally fails if the first of the two following syllables ends, and the second begins, with a vowel; as in pe′ri-od, o′ri-en′tal, etc.

(3) In many adjectives, as red′-hot′, un-armed′, etc., the accent is often variable, being stronger on one syllable or the other according to the rhythm of the sentence. Thus we say, a red′-hot′ stove; but, the stove is red′-hot′; a man un-armed′; but, usually, an un′armed′ man, etc. Such shifting, or variable, accent was formerly more common than at present, and there are many examples of it in the poets. The attributive use, as in a well′bred′ man, being the more usual and characteristic one, the accent proper to such use is the one usually given in the dictionary.

(4) Many in America give a marked secondary accent in certain words which properly have but one accent, and that on a syllable preceding the penult, as in ter′ri-to′ry, cir′cum-stanc′es, in′ter-est′ing, etc. This fault may be corrected by giving the accented syllable a sharp percussion, which carries the voice lightly through the rest of the word.

ADDITIONAL SYMBOLS FOR USE IN INDICATING PRONUNCIATION WITHOUT RESPELLING

For indicating PRONUNCIATION BY RESPELLING, the table on page vii. is complete in itself and is alone used throughout this Dictionary. To indicate PRONUNCIATION WITHOUT RESPELLING, the table below may be used in connection with that on page vii. The table here given is to be used only when any letter of a word has a sound that is represented in the other table by a different letter. Thus, in the respelling, s is used for one sound only, that in sin or so, never for that in his (hĭz), is (ĭz). To show the pronunciation of his, therefore, without respelling, the s is marked with a diacritic; thus: hi̱s; the first two letters (hĭ) being from the table on page vii., and the s̱ from the table below. In this table, the symbols in parentheses are the equivalent symbols from the respelling table.

In digraphs, mark only the letter that is to be regarded as sounded, as in breāk, brĕad, yīēld, vęil, etc. Ce, ci, sci, se, si, and ti, before a vowel and immediately after an accented syllable, usually have the sound of sh, and need not be marked. Silent e at the end of a syllable, as in fate, etc., need not be marked. When desirable, a silent letter may be shown as an unmarked italic. In a few words, the pronunciation can be indicated only by respelling.

RULES FOR THE PRONUNCIATION OF LATIN

Two methods of pronouncing Latin are now in extended general English use; one, the so-called English method, follows in general the analogies of English pronunciation according to certain formal rules; the other, the so-called Roman method, attempts to follow more or less closely, as far as it is known, the pronunciation of the Romans themselves at the height of their civilization (about B. C. 50 to A. D. 50).

The English method was until recently taught in both England and America, and is still used almost exclusively in the pronunciation of Latin scientific words, and in names, phrases, and quotations, when these are in English context. Since most of the Latin words and phrases contained in the Dictionary fall in one or another of these categories, their pronunciation is indicated according to the English method.

SYLLABICATION AND ACCENT OF LATIN WORDS

Every Latin word has as many syllables as it has vowels or diphthongs. In the English method, words are syllabified according to English analogies. In the Roman method, words are syllabified as follows: (a) A single consonant (including consonant i and v) or, by many, any consonant group (as sp, st, gn) that can begin a word, when between two vowels is written and pronounced with the following vowel. Doubled consonants are separated. Examples: mi'li-tes, de'ti-net. Some carry over an x to the following syllable, as in di'xit; but the division dix'it is, on the whole, to be preferred. (b) Prefixes and suffixes are kept separate.

Words of two syllables are accented on the first syllable; as, pa'ter, mi'les. Words of more than two syllables are accented on the penult (next to the last syllable), if it is long; otherwise they are accented on the antepenult (last syllable but two).

NOTE. No attempt is made to cover the rules for determining the quantities of Latin vowels and syllables. A complete statement of these is to be found in any Latin grammar. The proper accentuation is indicated for all Latin words and phrases. In accordance with most present usage, Latin words and phrases which are considered to be purely such are divided into syllables according to the Roman method, and further indication of the pronunciation is usually omitted, except that when such division would lead to mispronunciation of any word according to the English method, the pronunciation of the word according to that method is shown; as, non de'ti-net (dĕt'ĭ-nĕt). For those who prefer to pronounce such Latin quotations according to the Roman method, the syllabification as indicated, together with the Rules for the "Roman" Pronunciation of Latin given later, will be a sufficient guide.

RULES FOR THE ENGLISH PRONUNCIATION OF LATIN

Syllabic division, as forming a basis for these rules, follows the English method; thus, det'i-net, etc., and not de'ti-net, as now commonly divided. Cf. NOTE, above.

1. Vowels, when ending accented syllables, have always the sounds as in āle, ēve, īce, ōld, ūse; as, pā'ter, hō'mo, etc.

When final in unaccented syllables, vowels are as follows:

A has the sound of ȧ in so'fȧ; as, mu'sa (mū'zȧ), a-cer'bus (ȧ-sûr'bŭs).

E, o, and u have nearly the same sound as when accented, but slightly shorter; as, rē'tĕ, vō'lŏ, po'pu-lī (pŏp'ŭ-lī).

I, when the final sound of a word, always has its long sound (as in īce); as, nī'sī. EXCEPTION: The final i of tibi and sibi has, like the first i, its short sound (as in ĭt).

I, at the end of an unaccented syllable, not final, has its short sound; as, de'tĭ-net. EXCEPTION: I has its long sound in the first syllable of a word the second syllable of which is accented, when it either stands alone before a consonant, as in ī-dō'lum, or ends a syllable followed by a vowel, as in fī-ē'bam, ī-ăm'bus.

Y is always pronounced like i in the same position.

2. Vowels, when followed by a consonant in the same syllable, have always the sounds as in măn, mēt, ĭn, ŏdd, nūt; as, măg'nus, rĕg'num, hŏc, etc. EXCEPTIONS:—

A, following qu before dr, has the sound of a in quadrant, as in quad'rans (kwŏd'rănz); when followed by rt it has the sound of a in quart, as in quar'to. Otherwise, a before r has the sound of a in art, as in par'ticeps, ar'ma; except when followed by another r, as in păr'ri-ci'da.

E, i, and y, before r final in a word or final in a syllable, when followed in the next syllable by any other consonant than another r, sound as in her, fir; as, fer'vet (fûr'vĕt), hir'cus (hûr'kŭs).

Es, at the end of a word, sounds like the English word ease; as, mi'li-tes (mĭl'ĭ-tēz).

Os, at the end of plural cases, sounds like ose in dose; as, do'mi-nos (dŏm'ĭ-nōs).

Post, alone or compounded, is pronounced like post in English, as in post'e-a; but not in its derivatives, as in pŏs-tre'mus.

3. Diphthongs are as follows:

Æ (ae) and œ (oe) are always diphthongs unless separated by diæresis. They are pronounced as e would be in the same position; as, æ'vum (ē'vŭm), æs (ēz).

Au, when a diphthong, is pronounced as ô (ôr); as, au'rum (ô'rŭm).

Au, in the termination of proper names from the Greek, has the vowels pronounced separately; as, Men'e-lā'us.

Ai, ei, oi, and yi, usually have the vowels pronounced separately. When they are accented, and followed by another vowel, the i is pronounced like initial y; as, Cassiopeia (-pē'yȧ), Troia (trō'yȧ), Harpyia (-pĭ'yȧ).

Ei, when a diphthong, and not followed by another vowel, is pronounced like ī; as in ei-do'lon.

Eu, when a diphthong, is pronounced as ū (ūse); as in Eu-phrā'tes, e'heu.

Eu has the letters pronounced separately in the terminations eus and eum of Latin nouns and adjectives, except neuter; as, me'um, me'us. Otherwise it is pronounced as a diphthong; as, Eu-rō'pa (ŭ-rō'pȧ), The'seus (thē'sūs).

NOTE. The termination eus, in proper names derived from the third declension of Greek contracts in -εύς, is better pronounced in one syllable, as Or'pheus (ôr'fūs), The'seus (thē'sūs); although many pronounce it in two, Or'phe-us, The'se-us.

Ua, ue, ui, uo, uu, when diphthongs, are pronounced like wa, we, etc.; as, lin'gua (lĭn'gwȧ), quo'ta (kwō'tȧ), e'quus (ē'kwŭs), etc. They are always diphthongs after q and usually after g.

Ui in cui and huic is pronounced like ī (kī, hīk); or, by some, like wī (kwī, hwīk).

4. Consonants are, in general, pronounced as in English, but the following cases are to be noted:

C, before e, i, and y, and the diphthongs æ, œ, and eu, is pronounced as s; as in Cæ'sar, cœ'lum. EXCEPTION: C, standing or following an accented syllable, before i followed by a vowel, and also before eu and yo, has the sound of sh; as, fa'ci-as (fā'shĭ-ăs), Si'cy-on (sĭsh'ĭ-on).

Ch has the sound of k, as in char'ta (kär'tȧ), but before th or at the beginning of a word it is silent; as, Chtho'ni-a (thō'nĭ-ȧ).

Ct, initial, in words of Greek origin, is pronounced as t; as, cte-nid'i-um (tē-nĭd'ĭ-ŭm).

G is pronounced "soft" (like j) before e, i, and y, and the diphthongs æ and œ; as, ge'nus (jē'nŭs), æ'gis (ē'jĭs). Otherwise it has its "hard" sound (as in bag, go).

When g comes before another g "soft," it is assimilated to it in pronunciation; as, Ag'ger (ăj'ĕr).

Gn, initial, in words of Greek origin, is pronounced as n; as, gno'mon (nō'mŏn).

Mn, initial, in words of Greek origin, is pronounced as n; as, Mne-mos'y-ne (nē-mŏs'ĭ-nē).

Ph is usually pronounced as f. Before th at the beginning of a word it is usually silent; as, phthi'sis (thī'sĭs).

Ps, initial, in words of Greek origin, is pronounced as s; as, psy-cho'sis (sī-kō'sĭs).

Pt, initial, in words of Greek origin, is pronounced as t; as, pter′o-dac′tyl (tĕr′ō-dăk′tĭl).

S is usually "sharp" (as in sun). EXCEPTIONS: (a) Si, followed by a vowel and immediately preceded by a consonant in an accented syllable, is pronounced as shi; as, Al′si-um (ăl′shĭ-ŭm). (b) Si and zi, followed by a vowel and immediately preceded by an accented vowel, are pronounced zhi; as, ec-cle′si-a (ĕ-klē′zhĭ-ȧ), Sa-ba′zi-a (sȧ-bā′zhĭ-ȧ). In a few proper names, s preceded by a vowel in an accented syllable and followed by i before another vowel, has the sound of sh; as, Asia (ā′shĭ-ȧ), Theodosia (thē′ō-dō′shĭ-ȧ).

S, final in a word, after e, æ, au, b, m, n, and r, has the sound of z; as, mi′les (mī′lēz), æs (ēz), laus (lôz), lens (lĕnz), Mars (märz). In accordance with English analogy, s is pronounced as z in Cæ′sar, cæ-su′ra (usually), mi′ser, mu′sa, re-sid′u-um, cau′sa, ro′sa, and their derivatives, and in some other words; but not (usually) in Cæsarea, nor in trans or its compounds; as, trans′-e-at.

T, following an accented syllable and preceding an i followed by another vowel, sounds like sh; as, ra′ti-o (rā′-shĭ-ō; -shō), Ig-na′ti-us (Ig-nā′shĭ-ŭs; -shŭs). But t in such positions retains its sound as in English tin after s, t, or x, as in Sal-lus′ti-us, Brut′ti-i; and in proper names ending in -tion or -tyon, as in The′o-do′ti-on, Am-phic′ty-on.

X, initial, has the sound of z, as in Xan′thi-um (zăn′-thĭ-ŭm), Xen′o-phon; otherwise it has the sound of ks, as in ax′is (ăk′sĭs), ex′e-unt. EXCEPTIONS: When ex (also by some ux) is followed by a vowel in an accented syllable, the x has the sound of gz; as, ex-em′plum (ĕg-zĕm′plŭm).

X, final in a syllable, before i followed by another vowel, or before u with the sound of ū or ů, is pronounced as ksh; as, nox′i-us (nŏk′shĭ-ŭs).

RULES FOR THE "ROMAN" PRONUNCIATION OF LATIN

There are no silent letters and no obscured vowels. Each vowel has always the same, or nearly the same, sound, but may be long or short in actual quantity.

The vowels are sounded as follows:

Long.	Short.
a, as in art.	a, as in ar-tis′tic.
e, ,, a in pale or cha′os.	e, ,, a in cha-ot′ic, or as e in pen.
i, ,, in po-lice′.	i, as in tin.
o, ,, ,, pole.	o, ,, ,, o-bey′.
u, ,, ,, rude (rōōd).	u, ,, ,, pull (pŏŏl).
y, ,, French u or German ü.

The diphthongs are sounded:

Æ (ae) as ai in aisle; au as ou in house; ei as ei in veil; eu as ā′o͞o; oi (oe) as oi in oil; ui as wē, as in cui (kwē), huic (hwēk).

The consonants:

B, d, f, h, k, l, m, n, p, and qu are pronounced as in English; except that bs and bt are pronounced as ps and pt.

C always as in cow; never as in city or in gracious (-shŭs). Cf. t.

Ch as k + h, about as in truck horse; but it may be pronounced as simple k.

G always "hard," as in go; never as in gem. When ngu precedes a vowel, the gu has the sound of gw; as in languens.

J is like y in yes.

Ph as p + h, about as in loophole; but it may be pronounced as simple p or like English ph (f), a sound which it acquired soon after the classical period.

R is trilled slightly with the tip of the tongue.

S always "sharp," as in sun.

Su as sw; as in suavitas.

T always as in tun; never as in nation (-shŭn).

Th as t + h, about as in hothouse; but it may be pronounced as simple t.

V like w.

X always as in box; never as in ex-ist′ (ĕg-zĭst′), or in xe′bec (zē′bĕk).

Z as in maze, or as dz in adz.

NOTE. Doubled letters, as dd, ll, pp, etc., should be pronounced so that both are distinctly audible, as dd in had done, etc.

RULES FOR THE PRONUNCIATION OF SPANISH

1. Vowels: A as in art, e as a in ale, i as in police, o as in old (or as in lord), u as in rule = oo in noon. When unaccented they are the same in quality, but slightly shorter in quantity, though always pronounced clearly and distinctly.

2. Consonants: As in English, with the following exceptions:

B, especially between vowels, sounds much like v in have, hence b and v are often interchanged and such spellings as Habana, Havana, are common.

C in Castilian Spanish (the standard literary form of the language) before e or i is like th in thin; but in some parts of Spain and generally throughout Spanish America and in the Philippine Islands it is like s in sun, although the Castilian sound is often taught in the schools.

Ch is always like ch in church.

D is not so clear as in English, but has more or less of the sound of th in this. Between vowels, especially in endings like -ado and -ido, and at the end of words, it is like th in this. At the end of words it is often so faint as hardly to be heard, and in colloquial speech it often disappears entirely in this position and between vowels.

G before a, o, u, or a consonant is like g in go; before e or i it is like h in hew pronounced with strong friction of the breath, about like German ch in ich, ach. Gu in the combinations gue and gui is like g in go, or like gu in English guess. If the u is marked with the diæresis (Sp. crema), as in agüero, the gü is like gu in guano (gwä′-nō), as is gu in the combinations gua and guo. In gn the two sounds are always distinct, as in signo (sēg′nō).

H is always silent.

J has always the strong sound of h like that of g before e and i.

Ll is like lli in William, as villa (vēl′yä). Colloquially it is like y in yes, and this pronunciation is very common in Spanish words and names in the southwestern United States.

ñ is like ni in onion, as doña (dō′nyä).

Q occurs only in the combinations que and qui, and is like k in keep, as Quijote (kē-hō′tā).

R is strongly trilled with the tip of the tongue.

S is always like s in sun.

X formerly had the sound of Spanish j, in many words and names in which it is replaced by j in the modern spelling of the Spanish Academy. In the spelling of the Academy it now represents the sound of x as in box, but the old spelling and sound often remain, esp. in Spanish America. In Mexican names x often has the sound of s, and in some dialects is silent or nearly so.

Y is like y in you, or, at the end of a word after a vowel or when used alone as the conjunction y (and), it is like e in me.

Z in Castilian Spanish is like th in thin, but in parts of Spain, in Spanish America, and in the Philippine Islands it is commonly like s in sun, although the Castilian sound is often taught in the schools.

3. Accent. Words ending in a consonant, except n or s, are regularly accented on the final syllable. Words ending in a vowel, or in n or s, are regularly accented on the next to the last syllable. If the accent is irregular it is indicated by placing the mark (′) over the vowel of the accented syllable, as in Córdoba (Cordova).

RULES FOR SPELLING CERTAIN CLASSES OF WORDS

FOUNDED ON THE ORTHOGRAPHY OF DR. WEBSTER, AS EXHIBITED IN THIS VOLUME

☞ The preferred spellings in this dictionary are in accordance with these rules. Other spellings are given as alternatives where they are very common, especially if they are the preferred forms in British usage.

FINAL CONSONANTS

§ 1. The letters f, l, and s at the end of monosyllables, and standing immediately after single vowels, are generally doubled; as in staff, cliff, doff, puff, all, bell, hill, toll, null, grass, press, hiss, moss, truss.

EXCEPTIONS: Clef, if, of, pal, as, gas, yes, his, this, pus, plus, bus (for omnibus), thus, and us. The s is not doubled when (as in o's, spade's, tones, loves, has, is, was, etc.) it is used to form the possessive case or the plural of a noun, or the third person singular of a verb.

§ 2. C, h, j, k, q, v, w, and y are never doubled when final. B, d, g, m, n, p, r, t, and z, when final, are doubled in only a few words, the most important being ebb, add, odd, egg, Ann, inn, Finn, Lapp, err, shirr, butt, fizz, buzz, fuzz.

§ 3. Monosyllables ending with the sound of k, and having c following the vowel, usually have k added after the c; as in black, stack, fleck, speck, click, thick, knock, smock, pluck, and buck.

EXCEPTIONS: Lac, sac, roc, arc.

§ 4. Words of more than one syllable, ending in -ic or -iac, are now written (except derrick) without the k; as, maniac, elegiac, zodiac, cubic, music, public. Words of more than one syllable, in which c is preceded by other vowels than i or ia, commonly end in ck; as, arrack, barrack, hammock, hillock, wedlock, hummock, bullock, futtock, shaddock.

EXCEPTIONS: Almanac, rebec, zebec, manioc, havoc.

FORMATION OF DERIVATIVES

§ 5. Words ending in c have a k inserted when adding a termination beginning with e, i, or y, so that the c shall not be pronounced like s: as, colic, colicky; traffic, trafficked, trafficking, trafficker; physic, physicked, physicking; zinc, zincked, zincking, zincky.

§ 6. Final consonant doubled. Words accented on the last syllable (including words of one syllable) if they end in a single consonant (except h or x) preceded by a single vowel, double the consonant before a suffix beginning with a vowel: as, clan, clan'nish; plan, planned, plan'ning, plan'ner; bag, bag'gage; hot, hot'ter, hot'test; wit, wit'ty; cabal', cabal'ler; abet', abet'ted, abet'ting, abet'tor; begin', begin'ning, begin'ner; infer', inferred', infer'ring. The consonant is doubled to preserve the short sound of the vowel. Thus, plănned, hŏttest, and abĕtted, would naturally be pronounced plāned, hōtest, and abēted, if the consonant were not doubled.

EXCEPTIONS: Gaseous, inferable, transferable, and derivatives in which the accent of the primitive is thrown back upon another syllable: as, cabal', cab'alism, cab'alist; prefer', pref'erence, refer', reference, defer', def'erence, etc.

§ 7. Final consonant not doubled. Words accented on any syllable except the last, words ending in more than one consonant, and words ending in a single consonant preceded by more than one vowel, do not double the final consonant before a suffix beginning with a vowel: as, daub, daubed, daub'er; need, need'y; brief, brief'er, brief'est; trav'ail, trav'ailed, trav'ailing; rev'el, rev'eled, rev'eling; trav'el, trav'eling, trav'eler; prof'it, prof'ited; act, act'ed, ac'tor; perform', perform'er; stand, stand'ing.

EXCEPTIONS: In humbug and a few other words ending in g, the g is doubled (humbugged, humbugging) before e or i, so that the g shall not be pronounced like j. The derivatives of kidnap are preferably spelled with one p, although the forms kidnapper, kidnapping, kidnapped are not uncommon. The form woolen, with one l, is usual in the United States, but woollen, with two l's, is preferred in British usage.

§ 8. Double consonant retained. Words ending in a double consonant commonly retain both consonants when adding suffixes: as, cbb, ebbing; odd, oddly; stiff, stiffness; fell, fellable; skill, skillful, skillfulness; will, willful, willfulness; dull, dullness; full, fullness. So also the double l is retained in the words installment, inthrallment, thralldom, and enrollment (from install, inthrall, thrall, and enroll), in order to prevent a false pronunciation if spelled with one l.

EXCEPTIONS: Illy; dully; fully.

§ 9. Silent e retained. Words ending with silent e generally retain this e before suffixes beginning with a consonant: as, pale, paleness; hate, hateful; incite, incitement; chaste, chastely, chasteness; move, movement; and the derivatives and compounds of these words.

EXCEPTIONS: Wholly, nursling, abridgment, acknowledgment, lodgment, judgment, and, often, certain words (as, due, duly; argue, argument; true, truly; awe, awful) in which the final e of the primitive is preceded by another vowel.

§ 10. Silent e omitted. Words ending with silent e generally drop the e before suffixes beginning with a vowel: as, bride, bridal; guide, guidance; plume, plumage; use, usable, usage; grieve, grievance; come, coming; shape, shaping; move, movable; sale, salable; fleece, fleecy; force, forcible; true, truism.

EXCEPTIONS: The e is retained in hoeing, shoeing, and toeing (from hoe, shoe, and toe), to guard against mispronunciation, but is generally excluded from shoer. It is retained in dyeing, singeing, springeing, swingeing, tingeing (from dye, singe, springe, swinge, tinge), to distinguish them from dying, singing, springing, swinging, tinging (from die, sing, spring, swing, ting). The word mileage, as commonly written, does not omit the e. Words ending in ce or ge retain the e before suffixes beginning with a or o, so that the c or g shall not be pronounced with the hard sound: as, peace, peaceable; notice, noticeable; manage, manageable; change, changeable; advantage, advantageous; outrage, outrageous. Mortgagor, pronounced mor'ga-jor', from mortgage, and pledgor, pronounced plej-or', from pledge, are the forms preferred in usage. In derivatives in -able, as usable, useable, salable, saleable, etc., usage is divided and often inconsistent.

§ 11. Ending -ing added to ie. Words ending in ie usually drop the e and change i to y when adding ing, so as to prevent two i's from coming together: as, die, dying; hie, hying; lie, lying; tie, tying; vie, vying.

§ 12. y preceded by a consonant. Words ending in y preceded by a consonant usually change y to i before any suffix except one beginning with i: as, icy, iciest, icily; mercy, merciless; tidy, tidiness; modify, modifies; foggy, fogginess; earthy, earthiness; pity, pitiful.

The derivatives of adjectives of one syllable usually retain the y: as, shy, shyness; sly, slyest; dry, dryly; spry, spryer, spryest; wry, wryness. But drier and driest, from dry, are commonly written with i instead of y; and drily, shily, slily, are not uncommon. Before -ship and -like, as secretaryship, suretyship, ladyship, citylike, countrylike, and in derivatives formed from baby and lady, the y is retained. The y also is retained in the possessive case of nouns, when formed by adding s with the apostrophe; as, country's, everybody's.

§ 13. y preceded by a vowel. Words ending in y preceded by a vowel generally retain the y unchanged before all suffixes: as, gay, gayety, gayly; play, player, plays; sway, swayed; obey, obeying; joy, joyful; enjoy, enjoyed; buy, buying; gluey, glueyness.

EXCEPTIONS: Daily, laid, paid, said, saith, slain, and staid (from day, lay, pay, say, slay, and stay), with their compounds; dewiness.

§ 14. Adding a vowel to a vowel ending. Words ending with a vowel sound generally retain the letter or letters representing such sound before a suffix beginning with a vowel: as, huzza, huzzaed; agree, agreeable, agreeing; weigh, weighing; dough, doughy; echo, echoed; woo, wooer; bow, bowed; beau, beauish. Sometimes cooes, wooes (from the verbs coo, woo) are found; but coos, woos, like taboos, shampoos, are preferable. Cooed and wooed are proper, like other participles in -ed.

PLURALS

☞ For irregular plurals, as of man, foot, brother, ox, deer, and for plurals of foreign words, as of datum, genus, index, crisis, consult the individual words in the Vocabulary. See also the Note under the word PLURAL in the Vocabulary.

§ 15. The plural of English nouns regularly ends in s, or, in certain classes of words, in es.

When the singular ends in a sound with which s can unite and be pronounced without forming a separate syllable, s only is added in forming the plural: as, bay, bays; shah, shahs; sea, seas; tree, trees; pie, pies; Hindu, Hindus; woe, woes; canto, cantos; virtue, virtues; purlieu, purlieus; claw, claws; cab, cabs; panic, panics; bead, beads; chief, chiefs; bag, bags; path, paths; ache, aches; plague, plagues; lock, locks; bell, bells; gem, gems; fan, fans; cup, cups; ear, ears; act, acts. Singulars ending in *o generally add s only to form their plurals. Certain words (as, echo, echoes; cargo, cargoes; embargo, embargoes; motto, mottoes; potato, potatoes, etc.) ending in o preceded by a consonant add es to form their plurals. Other nouns ending in o preceded by a consonant generally form their plurals regularly, though usage differs with regard to some of them. As to nouns ending in *i usage differs, though, as a rule, their plurals are preferably written with the termination is.

When the singular ends in a sound (as that of ch in much, sh, j, s, x, or z) with which s cannot unite in pronunciation, but must form a separate syllable, e is inserted before the s in forming the plural, unless the word ends with silent e, which then forms a separate syllable with the s: as, church, churches; rush, rushes; age, ages; edge, edges; lace, laces; gas, gases; class, classes; alias, aliases; marquis, marquises; case, cases; loss, losses; box, boxes; maze, mazes.

§ 16. Singulars ending in y preceded by a consonant form their plurals by adding es and changing y into i: as, mercy, mercies; lady, ladies; sky, skies; army, armies; pity, pities; Mary, Maries (sometimes Marys). This rule includes words ending in quy, in which u is strictly a consonant; as, colloquy, colloquies.

Singulars ending in y preceded by a vowel (except u having the power of w), form their plurals by adding s only: as, day, days; key, keys; money, moneys; monkey, monkeys; attorney, attorneys; alloy, alloys; guy, guys.

§ 17. The plurals of a few nouns ending in f or fe are irregularly formed by changing f or fe into ves. The principal examples are: life, lives; knife, knives; wife, wives; leaf, leaves; sheaf, sheaves; loaf, loaves; beef, beeves; thief, thieves; calf, calves; half, halves; elf, elves; shelf, shelves; self, selves; wolf, wolves. See STAFF, WHARF, SCARF, HOOF, TURF, in the Vocabulary. The plurals of other nouns ending in f, fe, or ff, are formed regularly by the addition of s only.

§ 18. Plural of a letter, figure, sign, etc. To express the plural of a letter, a figure, or any character or sign, or of a word mentioned without regard to its meaning, the letter s, generally preceded by the apostrophe, is appended, as in the phrases, "The two l's in all;" "The two 0's in 400;" "Two 's* in Orion;" "He uses too many if's." Some, however, omit the apostrophe in such cases.

MISCELLANEOUS RULES

§ 19. There are many words in respect to which usage, even that of the best authors, is variable. In such cases this variation of usage is indicated in the Vocabulary.

§ 20. -able or -ible. See -ABLE, in the Vocabulary.

§ 21. -er or -re. There is a class of words ending in -er, some of which are written by many authors with the termination -re; as, center, meter, theater, etc., often written centre, metre, theatre, etc. Acre, chancre, lucre, nacre, massacre, and ogre retain the termination -re, in order to preserve the hard sound of the c and g. Still, we have the adjective eager, the noun eagre or eager, and the preposition mauger or maugre.

§ 22. -ize or -ise. Certain words ending, as pronounced, with the sound of long i, followed by z, are written with either -ize or -ise: as, criticize or criticise; civilize or civilise; naturalize or naturalise; patronize or patronise. But the spelling in -ise for this class being now less often used, only the form in -ize is given in this book. Words still retaining the spelling -ise are: those derived from the French verb prendre (participle pris or prise), as apprise, comprise, emprise, enterprise, surprise; and, also, advertise, advise, affranchise, arise, chastise, circumcise, compromise, demise, despise, devise, disenfranchise, disfranchise, disguise, enfranchise, exercise, exorcise, franchise, merchandise, premise, revise, supervise, surmise.

§ 23. mold or mould. The words mold and molt, and their compounds and derivatives, are written in this Dictionary with o instead of ou, in analogy with the words bold, bolt, colt, gold, etc., from which the u has been dropped. Many authors, however, write these words mould and moult, and their derivatives in like manner; and this spelling is also given in this Dictionary as alternative.

§ 24. -or or -our. There is a numerous class of words almost universally written in the United States with the termination -or, many of which are also written, esp. in England, with the termination -our; as, candor, favor, honor, labor, rumor, vigor. English usage, however, is not uniform with respect to these words, many of them being written with -or in English books.

EXPLANATORY NOTES

Preferred Forms of Spelling or Pronunciation. When two or more forms of spelling or of pronunciation are recorded the general rule has been to place first the one that has been selected as preferable. Each form entered, however, has the support of good usage, and in many cases this usage is practically equally divided. Varying degrees or specific variations of usage have been indicated by limiting words, as also, often, sometimes (see MANDREL, PATENT, CONJURE). When instead of a definition there is a cross reference (introduced by =, by Var. of, or by see) to another spelling, the form referred to is the one preferred.

Capitalization. When a word in writing or print should begin with a capital letter the vocabulary word itself begins with a capital. Where, in a specific use, a different style from that shown by the vocabulary entry is to be followed, [cap.] (meaning a capital initial) or [l. c.] (meaning a lower case or small initial) is inserted at the definition affected. Thus Italic in sense 1 should begin with a capital, but in sense 2 a small letter is preferred.

Hyphened Words. Words that are to be written or printed with a hyphen have this hyphen indicated by a mark – longer and heavier than the short light hyphen - used to show division into syllables; as in a'ble–bod'ied, light'–heart'ed-ness.

Pronunciation. A part or the whole of a pronunciation is often omitted when it is the same as that of a word immediately preceding.

The accentuation only is given for some compound words, and for some derivatives ending in common suffixes like -ess, -est, -ing, -ist, -less, -like, -ness, -ship, if the pronunciation is perfectly regular and can therefore be easily learned from the separate parts.

Figures within the parentheses with the pronunciation refer to sections of the GUIDE TO PRONUNCIATION, pp. ix.–xx.

Principal parts of verbs are given in small capitals after the vocabulary titles, except when the parts are regularly formed by the simple addition of -ed or -d and -ing (see RULES FOR SPELLING, pp. xxi.–xxii.).

Plurals are given whenever they are irregular in form or when, from analogy, an irregular form might be expected. For the regular formation of plurals see RULES FOR SPELLING, pp. xxi.–xxii.

See PLURAL, after such words as blackfish, deer, quail, trout, etc., refers to the Note under the word PLURAL in the Vocabulary, for information as to the two plural forms in use and the differences in their meanings.

See -ICS, as at mathematics, refers to the entry at -ICS for information as to the use of words with this ending both as singular and plural.

The comparative and superlative forms of adjectives are given in small capitals after the vocabulary word except where these forms are made by the simple addition of -er and -est or by the use of more and most. See COMPARE, v. t., 3 in the Vocabulary.

Etymologies are printed within brackets [ ], the words from which the vocabulary word is derived being in italics with definitions in romans. Thus: ap-pear'. [fr. F., fr. L. apparēre to appear; ad + parēre to come forth.] This may be read: appear is derived from a French word that came from the Latin apparēre meaning "to appear;" apparēre is made up of the Latin ad (a preposition that is the source of the English prefix ad-, defined in its vocabulary place) and parēre meaning "to come forth." cur'few. [fr. OF., fr. covrir to cover + feu fire, fr. L. focus hearth.] This may be read: curfew is from an Old French word that is derived from the Old French covrir meaning "to cover" and feu meaning "fire"; feu is from the Latin focus meaning "hearth."

Certain derivatives are run on after the primitive word when the meaning may easily be gathered from the meaning of the suffix and that of the primitive. Each suffix so used, as -er, -hood, -ic, -ment, -ness, -ship, is fully defined in its vocabulary place. Often a direct reference to the suffix (as, see -NESS, see -LY, see -HOOD) is inserted.

Music, Scot., Archaic, Colloq., or a similar label, when preceding the first numbered definition of a word applies to all of the definitions; when preceding a group of definitions distinguished by a, b, c, etc., it applies to the entire group (see TARGE, SUE, SUITE). Otherwise, such a label applies only to the definition to which it is joined. Both or All may precede a label (as, Both Obs.) to show that it applies to two or more parts of speech, as a noun and a verb, defined under one vocabulary title (see SPLUTTER).

‖ prefixed to a vocabulary word indicates that this word is from a foreign language and that it would ordinarily be printed in italic letters when used in English; as, ‖ a'ban'don', ‖ An'no Do'mi-ni.

X 2, X 6, $\frac{1}{2}$, $\frac{1}{6}$, or the like, inserted at an illustration indicates that a picture is twice, six times, one half, one sixth, etc., as long and as high as the original.

= preceding a word in small capitals indicates that the vocabulary word has the same meaning as the word in small capitals and that the latter is the preferred form.

Syn. ANTECEDENT, PRECEDING, PRECEDENT, FOREGOING, PREVIOUS, PRIOR, FORMER, ANTERIOR agree in implying temporal succession. ANTECEDENT (opposed to subsequent, consequent) and PRECEDING (opposed to succeeding, following) differ in that preceding usually applies to that which goes immediately before (as, the preceding day), whereas antecedent often suggests an indefinite interval; as, a period antecedent to the Conquest. Antecedent, unlike preceding, often involves logical, as well as temporal, connection or dependence; as, an antecedent cause, probability. PRECEDENT often applies to that on whose going before the validity or effectiveness of something else depends; as, conditions precedent. FOREGOING (opposed to following) applies almost exclusively to statements. PREVIOUS and PRIOR (opposed to subsequent) are often used convertibly, esp. with to. But prior sometimes implies a closer relation than previous; thus, a previous obligation is one merely earlier in time, whereas a prior obligation may be one that takes precedence. FORMER (opposed to latter), more definitely than prior, implies comparison. ANTERIOR (opposed to posterior), also comparative in force, applies to position, usually in space.

In ENCHANT and BEWITCH the original connotation is often latent; enchanting commonly suggesting such compelling qualities as hold and bind, bewitching, such engaging graces as draw and allure ; as, enchanting music, a bewitching smile.
